Oral History Institute Online Training

As HSS nears its centennial year, the women’s caucus and the centennial committee are collaborating on a project to collect oral histories of the field. Throughout the next year, we will be urging historians of science to collect these histories.

To encourage young scholars to collect these histories, and to develop skills in this field that will enhance their individual scholarship, HSS is offering four (4) scholarships to attend the Oral History Institute online training through the Science History Institute. The training is August 14-17 from 10-1EDT. For more information, please visit this website.

To apply for the scholarship, please send a short (250 word) statement telling us why you believe this training would be useful to you and a CV to Sam Muka smuka@stevens.edu. Applications are due by July 28 and the awardees will be contacted by August 5.

If you receive the scholarship, you would be expected to take at least one (1) oral history for the HSS centennial celebration.

This scholarship is open to current graduate students pursuing either a MA or PhD. Please contact Sam Muka or Kate Sheppard sheppardka@mst.edu with any questions.
