A13 WINGS Roundtable on Philanthropy and the Academy

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

12:00 to 1:30 pm

Room: 2A 33

Academic and research institutions play an increasingly vital role within the global philanthropy ecosystem. In a recent mapping exercise, WINGS identified over 70 universities or research institutes with programs focused on philanthropy; staff are in the process of surveying these institutions. (The number does not include the many US- and European-based university programs for non-profit management). Unlike many academic programs, these are not primarily theoretical or aimed at producing Ph.D. faculty. Most are committed to utilizing research and teaching to improve the effectiveness and impact of the field. This roundtable will highlight developing country experience with academic programs, the emerging trends in research, as well as new efforts to increase cooperation among the academic centers in this field.

A14 #GivingTuesday and the Democratization of Philanthropy in a Connected World

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism

Roundtable Discussion

12:00 to 1:30 pm

Room: 7A 32

#GivingTuesday is a fast growing international movement that encourages citizen engagement in philanthropic activities based around a global day of giving. With an organized presence in more than 40 countries, the movement is characterized by organic growth, and an embrace of innovation and co-creation processes enabling nonprofit leaders working in radically different third-sector contexts to both shape country-specific approaches while sharing, learning and evolving as a cohesive movement. We bring together five leaders of the #GivingTuesday movement from across the world to share the key findings, data and analysis from #GivingTuesday activities in their region in the period 2015 - 2017 to determine to what extent the movement can be said to cause a tangible impact on democratizing philanthropy, empowering more citizens to engage in social impact activities and increasing the legitimacy of the nonprofit sector in general. This round table offers an insight into its unique approach and wider lessons on how horizontal, co-creating movements of nonprofit actors can generate a shift in power dynamics that expands participation and third sector capacity.

A15 Russian Civil Society “Between the Carrot and the Stick,”

Contradicting Policy, Coping Strategies and Consequences

Governance, Management Adaptation and Sustainability of Third Sector Organizations

Roundtable Discussion

12:00 to 1:30 pm

Room: 7A 33

This roundtable is aimed at building a scholarly debate around key issues relating to the contradictory policy measures introduced by the Russian government in respect to non-profit organizations. The law on “foreign agents” problematized the receipt of foreign financial aid and provoked huge pressure on certain organizations and their workers (servants and volunteers). At the same time, other NGOs were encouraged by the government and received additional development opportunities. First, we will question whether it is plausible to mitigate political regime dynamic and social policy reforms, considering a contradicting policy as puzzling but still unified policy efforts. Second, we will formulate a set of long-term consequences for the civil society and the nonprofit sector gazing into coping strategies applied by various types of organizations and civic initiatives in response to a contradicting policy. Third, we will identify trajectories of civil society development under similar post-communist contexts considering a comparative perspective and widening empirical and conceptual explanations.

B13 Advancing the Measurement and Categorization of Official Philanthropy Statistics

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism
Roundtable Discussion

2:00 to 3:30 pm

Room: 2A 33

As notions of giving and philanthropy have expanded through technological innovations as well as shifts in perspectives on the role of private contributions to public goods, there are more pathways for philanthropy emerging that are not being sufficiently accounted in official statistics of philanthropy. Two examples have emerged recently where organizations tasked with developing official charitable statistics have attempted to push the boundaries of “counting as usual” to move toward a more complete picture of 21st century donors and philanthropy patterns. The Center on Nonprofits and Philanthropy published the Giving Innovation dashboard to capture even more of the dynamic giving patterns emerging through other channels like crowd-funding, donor advised funds, online giving and digital currency. And the European Foundation Centre engaged in a project to expand the classification of philanthropic activity in its Institutional Philanthropy Spectrum (IPS). This roundtable will gather peer organizations from the US, Belgium, China, India, Brazil and Saudi Arabia to discuss efforts to improve the measurement and classification of philanthropy in these countries, our roles and priorities, barriers we face, and what we can learn from one another.

B14 Religious Communities and Civil Society in Europe

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

2:00 to 3:30 pm

Room: 7A 32

Civil society research since the 1990s has tended, for practical rather than for systematic reasons, to exclude religious communities, although, in looking at basic definitory categorizations, these communities may well be defined as belonging to civil society. Within these communities, however, there is a growing sense that to increase the distance from government would help them define an identity better suited to pursue their mission in the 21st century. Research due to be completed in 2018 aims at exploring this development further at European level. The emergence of non-Christian, most particularly Muslim communities, in traditional Christian societies, has added relevance to the research issues, while shifts of mindset, notably in the Roman Catholic Church, are driving changes within majority religious communities. This roundtable revisits the topic originally introduced at the ISTR Conference two years ago, and presents the empirical and theoretical findings of recent research on 1) the shift of outlook due to an increasing focus on religion in Europe, b) majority and minority churches in Poland in the context of civil society, c) a comparison between different churches in The Netherlands, and d) volunteering in religious communities in Scandinavian countries.

B15 Experiential Learning, Case Study Research, and Case Study Writing in Nonprofit, Online Courses

Research on Teaching Third Sector Studies

Roundtable Discussion

2:00 to 3:30 pm

Room: 7A 33

The proliferation of online nonprofit course delivery presents specific pedagogical challenges for instructors and students. One challenge is how best to incorporate experiential learning in an asynchronous learning environment that ties theory to practice and creates a learning community. A second challenge is to align existing nonprofit organizations to the instructional materials available to nonprofit educators and their students. We argue that by combining elements of applied research projects across the curriculum, the results can create new, dynamic case studies for instructional purposes. Faculty and practitioners from the United States and Canada will discuss the process of conducting experiential learning and using the results to develop case studies. The idea of students developing teaching case studies was formed by one of the presenters and has been highly effective in a graduate course. This roundtable will explore the varying processes educators use in selecting, constructing, and using case studies in online nonprofit education courses. Participants will address the questions from different perspectives graduate versus undergraduate classes and face-to-face versus online teaching experience.

C13 Opportunities and Challenges of Nonprofit-Business Collaborations: Implications for Practice and Research

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

4:00 to 5:30 pm

Room: 2A 33

In the last decade, support from governments and the public to NPOs has been declining and NPOs are expected to generate revenue and support from novel sources. At the same time, corporate social responsibility (CSR) has been growing rapidly with many businesses striving to be good citizens, sustainable and responsible due to the many benefits of CSR. The two trends create remarkable opportunities for the for-profit and not-for-profit sectors to collaborate and create successful partnerships. These partnerships could manifest in corporate philanthropy, corporate volunteering, multi-stakeholder initiatives and other manners of collaborations. However, the NPO-business collaboration also poses challenges and difficulties and often comes at a cost if it is not done well. This roundtable will present the opportunities and challenges of NPO-business collaboration while each presenter will focus on a specific aspect of it, present research and recent practices. This will be followed by a broad discussion with all participants on these topics, including cases and examples. The implications for practices, but mostly for research, will also be discussed.

C14 ERNOP Roundtable on Refugees & Philanthropy - The Refugee Crisis from a Third Sector Perspective

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism

Roundtable Discussion

4:00 to 5:30 pm

Room: 7A 32

The ongoing refugee crisis in Europe constitutes one of the greatest political and humanitarian challenges in recent decades. Worldwide, approximately 65 million refugees are fleeing from war, hunger or political prosecution. In 2016 alone, more than 1.2 million people applied for asylum within the European Union. During the first stage of the refugee crisis in summer of 2015, many volunteers, nonprofit organizations, and private citizens followed their hearts and philanthropic missions to assist local government in providing basic humanitarian services to the newly arrived refugees. Furthermore, voluntary work is also a resource of empowerment and employability for engaged refugees themselves and therewith for a successful integration process. The roundtable will bring together international scholars from the European Union and Norway to present and discuss research findings from different projects ranging from the benefits and strains of volunteering for refugees to barriers of refugee integration.

C15 Pushing the Civil Society Education Research Agenda

Research on Teaching Third Sector Studies

Roundtable Discussion

4:00 to 5:30 pm

Room: 7A 33

Despite the a growing body of research on formal and informal civil society education around the world, little is known globally about how we prepare, train, and educate present and future leaders and professionals in these organizations. Nor have more theoretical and normative issues been succinctly addressed, such as scrutinizing valuation devices deployed in rankings or addressing issues related to distinctiveness, gender, or the role of civil society education in a globalizing world. To be sure, exceptions exist, including a debate on the best place for civil society education as well as analyses of organizational functions and analytical frameworks for international comparisons, more research is needed addressing theoretical and normative issues, not only to complement past and ongoing mappings of formal and informal civil society education programs and courses around the world, but also to push the research agenda. This roundtable will invite a set of panelists to encourage an appraisal of the current research agenda as well as to identify productive avenues for future research.

D9 Revisiting the Legitimacy and Credibility of NGOs: Readings, Reasons and Research

Challenges and Opportunities of Advocacy by NGOs and Nonprofits

Roundtable Discussion

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: 12A 33

Prompted by the recent media and political flurry about sexual abuse in the aid sector, this Roundtable will discuss mistrust and stresses facing NGOs today. In pursuing their causes, NGOs appear to lose legitimacy in the eyes of politics and the public in Europe and possibly beyond. Credibility, reputation and trust in efficacy all appear to be under threat. Old allies are suddenly no longer supportive. The space for civil society to operate seems to be shrinking, and more. This Roundtable is an opportunity to explore new research agendas stemming from a damaging state of affairs that appears to envelope NGOs dedicated to humanitarian responses and long term sustainable development. Panelists and the audience will be invited to give their reading of what is going on, why it is occurring now and what this might mean for future studies.

D13 Making Public Service Markets and the Role of the Third

Sector: Theoretical and Empirical Perspectives

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: 2A 33

The aim of this roundtable is to understand the dynamics of public service 'market' arrangements involving the third sector, in terms of how they are framed, shaped, accomplished and 'unsettled' – in diverse international and public service contexts. The project of public service reform in 'advanced' countries including the UK, Australia and the US has been underway for upwards of 40 years, as a product of shifting political and public attitudes to the state, welfare services and public finance. Informed by the competitive tenets of new public management (NPM), successive governments have sought to restructure public services in the image of markets amidst a wider reorientation of welfare state functions; and this has been accompanied by exhortations to further deepen third sector organisation (TSO) involvement in such 'markets'. Tensions relating to the role of the third sector in public service markets continue today, and have not fully accounted for newly emerging market mechanisms, such as consumer-based funding models or financial instruments such as social impact bonds. Further, nuances across national contexts and service delivery areas have not been fully explored. We suggest that it is time to re-examine the third sector's position in new public service markets. The discussion will be guided by two overarching research questions: 'how are public service markets involving the third sector organised, understood and framed?'; and 'how are third sector participants positioned in public service markets?'

D14 Contributing to the Global Research Agenda on Volunteering for Peace and Development

The Third Sector and Development

Roundtable Discussion

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: 7A 33

Volunteering is recognized as a cross-cutting means of implementation for the global 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development; however, there remains a major demand for empirical evidence to document its value and challenge. Given the universal nature of Agenda 2030, it requires research collaboration across common divides. United Nations Resolution 70/129 encourages academia take stock of existing data, identify best practices, and locate weaknesses and evidence gaps to strengthen global knowledge on volunteering as a key means of strengthening peace and development. Participants at the roundtable will discuss how better evidence might be obtained to address the contribution of volunteerism contribute to the development process and its outcomes; the key enabling or disabling factors that affect volunteerism's contribution; how to scale up successful measurement and research innovations; and what steps roundtable participants willing to take to help build the evidence base.

D17 Working Together on the Edge (Dutch Days)

Democracy and Civil Society Organizations

Roundtable Discussion

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: Auditorium

With representatives from the public, foundation and corporate sector, this round table will address the question of "What dynamics arises when CSOs, corporates and public organizations together engage in societal problem solving." Foundations, government and market actors all work according to different principles regarding legitimacy, accountability and by different incentives. This causes intriguing challenges if two or more of these actors engage in societal problem solving. Presenters will address the question from different angles and provide solutions for effective collaboration.

D18 Teaching AND Learning: Perspectives on Engaged Scholarship in the Third Sector

Special Session

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: 14A 33

This instructional, demonstrative and interactive workshop will present best practices and lessons learned about teaching in a nonprofit graduate program where a comprehensive model of engaged scholarship has been refined over the last 14 years. Faculty and current students will present how they have used cases and applied consulting projects to teach and study nonprofit management topics. Impact data and examples of finished projects will be presented. Systems for managing student team dynamics, fairly assessing group projects, and strategies for ensuring a good experience for “client” organizations will be shared as well as a detailed applied project guidebook that was written by and for students.

E13 Looking Toward the Horizon in Civil Society-State Relations: Celebrating the Life and Work of Nissan Limor (1944-2017)

Democracy and Civil Society Organizations

Roundtable Discussion

11:00 to 12:30 pm

Room: 7A 32

Friends and colleagues of Nissan Limor, distinguished Israeli scholar and policy advocate for the nonprofit sector and civil society, will gather to discuss the key themes that animated his work and life and to honor his accomplishments. Nissan's work was concerned with restrictions on the nonprofit sector, in Israel and abroad; regulatory and tax policy toward the sector; politicization of nonprofit regulation; the problems of restricting foreign funding to domestic civil society; and related themes. In one of his last publications, a chapter for Regulatory Waves: Comparative Perspectives on State Regulation and Self-Regulation in the Nonprofit Sector, Nissan and his co-author Noy Brindt asked us to "look toward the horizon" in civil society-state relations, rigorously asking what kinds and mixtures of regulation and self-regulation provide the appropriate balance between freedom and management for civil society.

E14 Inequality and Power in Volunteering: Beyond the Dominant Status Model

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

11:00 to 12:30 pm

Room: 7A 33

This panel focuses on questions of inequality and power in volunteering. The topic has been theorized almost exclusively in terms of a 'dominant status model' or 'resource model' which states that dominant groups in society are most likely to participate because they possess the necessary economic, cultural and social resources. The model is well-established yet could be considered as rather static, generic and mainly focused on access to volunteering. Inequalities and power dynamics in volunteering, however, are much less theorized hence remain ill-understood. In this roundtable, we aim to advance knowledge on this theme by exploring and discussing the possible merits of new theoretical approaches (i.e., both established frameworks not yet applied and recent innovative approaches). We critically reflect on more complex and dynamic processes occurring in volunteering, such as inequalities between different types of volunteers, volunteer activities, and fields of volunteering; power dynamics in interactions during volunteer activities, etc. We highlight material, discursive and affective mechanisms that may mitigate or exacerbate these inequalities.

E17 Minimum Legal Norms for Optimum Conditions in Civil Society? (Dutch Days)

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism

Roundtable Discussion

11:00 to 12:30 pm

Room: Auditorium

The regulation of civil society provides the framework under which those organizations can most effectively provide services in education, health, social services, housing, development aid and so on. What common principles of civil society law can be identified?
How can government create a legislative framework that provides a supportive infrastructure for civil society on the one hand, without creating a high administrative burden on the other? A number of international experts have addressed these questions in the study “Civil Society in Europe. Minimum Norms and Optimum Conditions of its Regulation” and will address the outcomes.

F13 Teaching Critical Perspectives on Nonprofit and Voluntary Organization Management

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

2:00 to 3:30 pm

Room: 2A 33

This roundtable includes discussion of critical pedagogy, drawing on chapters in an edited textbook Reframing Nonprofit Management: Democracy, Inclusion, and Social Change. The aim of the textbook is to provide students with a critical perspective on nonprofit and voluntary organization management by extending the traditional discussion to issues related to power, politics, control, and the possibility of democratic change. As nonprofit and voluntary organizations are increasingly taking on more public administration and governance roles, students of nonprofit and voluntary organization management need tools and methods that enable them to critically think about how to not only cope, but also challenge and change, the environments in which they work. Presenters will provide an overview of the chapter they have written and how it can be applied in the classroom. Presenters will emphasize the pedagogical usefulness of their chapters—how they plan to apply it classrooms and what assignments and exercises might be done in conjunction with the chapter.

How do national fiscal regulations impact the work of civil society organizations? There are major international differences in the fiscal facilities for civil society organizations. Examples are varieties of tax-deductions for donors, matching schemes and exemptions from a variety of taxations. In this round table, experts will discuss the pro- and contra of a number of fiscal conditions regarding philanthropic and non-profit organizations.

G13 The Role of the Third Sector in Refugee Integration at the Local Level

Hybridity, Legitimacy and the Third Sector

Roundtable Discussion

8:30 to 10:00 am

Room: 2A 33

Matters of social integration have surged to the forefront of public debates in the wake of increased international refugee migration since 2015. Most scholars and politicians agree that integration takes place at the local level, and TSOs are often involved. However, while involvement of TSOs in local service provision can secure funding and enhance their sustainability, it can also put them at risk of losing some of their civil society functions and legitimacy. Empirical knowledge on the modes of cooperation between public and private actors, on criteria for their success and on the contributions of the third sector to legitimate and effective local integration policies is not yet comprehensively available. The roundtable will bring together scholars from recent research projects to discuss findings and synthesize knowledge from different research perspectives in Germany and Austria.

G14 Critical Pedagogy, South Epistemologies and Social Innovation: Challenges and Lessons from Researching, Teaching and Learning

Research on Teaching Third Sector Studies

Roundtable Discussion

8:30 to 10:00 am

Room: 7A 33

Within the evolving field of social innovation, researchers and practitioners are grappling with the complexities of cross-sector relationships, hybrid organizations, and navigating the divergent goals and values of the different societies, organizations, government, and communities. Of utmost concern to practitioners and researchers is how to improve the research and the teaching-learning process to support the social innovation. Of particular importance is the exchange of ideas among researchers based in developed and less developed countries on new methodologies and models of researching, teaching and learning that make a stronger connection between theory and practice. This roundtable will encourage international dialogue among practitioners and researchers that can lead to improvements in the theoretical background that give a more complex vision about knowledge building and ultimately contribute to social innovations in the different societies and communities.

G17 Bequests as The Black Box of the Next Golden Age of Philanthropy (Dutch Days)

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism
Roundtable Discussion
8:30 to 10:00 am
Room: Auditorium

In many countries, a growing number of people bequeath their accumulated wealth to established organizations or create new foundations as their final wish. Indeed, elderly can be seen as key-actors in “The New Golden Age of Philanthropy”. However, the questions on who gives what to which charitable goals by means of legacies remain largely unresolved. This roundtable will touch upon a number of these questions, while ‘geronto-philanthropy’ might be coined as term for this cornerstone of philanthropy for the decades ahead.

H13 Ten Things You Didn't Know About Private Philanthropy for Development

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

10:30 to 12:00 pm

Room: 2A 33

Philanthropy's role in advancing sustainable development attracts a lot of attention. However, very few figures are available to date on the volumes and sectors of philanthropic flows supporting development. To address this lack of reliable and comparable data, the OECD produced the report on Private Philanthropy for Development. The report calls into question long-held assumptions about the volume, nature and potential of foundations' engagement in developing countries, and the role they can play to support the Sustainable Development Goals. This Session will present the report's ground-breaking data and fresh perspectives on how foundations could leverage their unique strengths in the most powerful way possible.

H16 Instructional Issue and Concerns Around the World

Research on Teaching Third Sector Studies

Roundtable Discussion

10:30 to 12:00 pm

Room: 9A 16

Nongovernmental academic programs regardless of the country in which they are located share common problems. How are students recruited and supported for their studies? What skills and knowledge should be incorporated into courses of the program? Where will the program recruit qualified faculty? To what degree should theory be emphasized compared to policy? How is the technical competency of graduates ensured? Are there jobs available to graduates? Does a program and its graduates promote civil society? These are some of the common questions to be explored in this roundtable being organized by the new teaching interest group. Participants should leave with a sense of common problems, issues, and concerns as well as ones that are unique to areas in specific areas of the world.

H17 Next Gen Philanthropists (Dutch Days)

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism

Roundtable Discussion

10:30 to 12:00 pm

Room: Auditorium

Giving circles are an example of a new type of philanthropic engagement. But what motivates the next gen philanthropists? Do they differ from traditional donors? Are they Game Changers or Game Breakers? New endowed foundations are established by younger and entrepreneurial founders. To what extent are these foundations driven by different drivers? Also crowdfunding might be an example of a new expression of philanthropic behavior. Although the phenomenon "crowdfunding" isn't new, the growing possibilities to make a difference as an individual for an specific (private) goal, increases awareness of the impact of private initiative, including the economic value of "giving time". These questions are central in this round tables.

For many years, volunteers have been presenting their own experiences through social media and increasingly, volunteers or former volunteers are using their experience as a basis for academic research. In recent years, research Institutions and International Volunteer Cooperation Organisations have also sought to formalize this process. Three key examples of qualitative inquiry include VSO's Valuing Volunteering action research, field research for the 2018 State of the World's Volunteerism Report (SWVR) and research on perspectives from partners of the Coordinating Committee for International Voluntary Service. Individual academics have also been researching accounts of volunteer voices. This panel will share experiences of, and critique the methodology of, using volunteer researchers to conduct participatory research.

I14 Resilient Organizations in the Third Sector

Governance, Management Adaptation and Sustainability of Third Sector Organizations

Roundtable Discussion

2:00 to 3:30 pm

Room: 7A 33

Presenters:

This roundtable will illustrate how TSOs overcome obstacles and manage to survive in turbulent organizational environments. We will present some of the results of the EU-funded Third Sector Impact (TSI) project and launch the e-book "Resilient Organizations in the Third Sector." We will discuss those TSOs that successfully managed to adapt to changing environment conditions in the organizational fields of social services, sports and arts and culture. The round table will focus on the welfare partnership countries of Central Europe: The Netherlands, France, Austria and Germany.

I17 Beyond Do-it-yourself in Development Aid (Dutch Days)

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

2:00 to 3:30 pm

Room: Auditorium

Small scale voluntary development initiatives express a Do-it-Yourself trend in private initiatives. How are these initiatives related to the large established organizations. What is the sustainability of these initiatives? What kind of difference do they make? And to what extent are the experiences in international development also applicable to other domains? Chaired by experts from the Netherlands, this round table will discuss the do-it-yourself trend by addressing these questions and by elaborating on the potential consequences for the established order of philanthropic organizations.

Dutch Plenary

4:00 – 5:30 pm

Pluralism in the Polder: (Pre)conditions and progress" if known

After centuries of building dykes and innovative water management systems, the Dutch have been able to protect the country from the sea, and have taken land by creating its world famous polders. The classic need for different stakeholders to combat water by working together can be found in other collaborative networks as well, and has been named the 'Poldermodel'. This plenary will pull together the key messages from the "Dutch Days" roundtables at the ISTR Conference and will reflect on the relevance, advantages and shortcomings of this Dutch consensus based "Poldermodel", which can be described as "a pragmatic recognition of pluriformity" or "cooperation despite differences" between different societal actors. Does it provide opportunities for growth within civil society? Or does it hamper initiative? And what future for the 'poldermodel' in an era of increasing fragmentation? All ISTR conference participants are invited to join the discussion!

J13 Journal of Nonprofit Education and Leadership (JNEL): An Outlet for International Discussions on Teaching

Research on Teaching Third Sector Studies

Roundtable Discussion

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: 2A 33

The mission of the Journal of Nonprofit Education and Leadership (JNEL), which started publication in 2000, is to improve nonprofit education and leadership through the publication and dissemination of peer-reviewed manuscripts centered on professional practice research, and theoretical discussions. Originally focused on American nonprofit education, the journal has expanded to include nongovernmental organization education and leadership. In volume 5, no 4, published in November 2015, the entire issue examines nongovernmental academic programs around the world under special editor Roseanne Mirabella from Seaton Hall University. JNEL wishes to become a publication improving nonprofit education and nongovernmental education in the broadest sense possible. The rationale for this roundtable is to increase awareness of the journal in the international community of researchers, teachers, and consultants. In addition, the editor-in-chief is looking for input from the global community on ways to improve the journal and make it valuable for nongovernmental organization education programs and their teachers.

J14 The Changing Role of European and US Foundations: Implications for Policy and Philanthropy

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism

Roundtable Discussion

9:00 to 10:30 am

Room: 7A 32

This roundtable brings together scholars of foundations and organized philanthropy from Europe and the US to discuss the many contradictory demands foundations face: that they should take action that is bolder, more energetic, venturesome, and demanding; that they should do more to relieve immediate need and reduce inequality; and that they should defer to activists, professionals, and ordinary citizens. Moreover, foundations also face other demands: that foundations should focus on their home locales, that they should build up important local institutions, that they should move resources from wealthy places to poor ones, and that they should promote national standards and international competitiveness—or reinforce a local culture. This roundtable offers an opportunity to discuss key trends and developments pertaining to foundations from a variety of disciplinary and country perspectives.

K13 Episodic Event Volunteering: A Global Phenomenon

New Models of Philanthropy and Voluntarism

Roundtable Discussion

11:00 to 12:30 pm

Room: 2A 33

A review of the literature suggests that episodic event volunteering is quite common in sporting events, fundraising events, and community festivals. This roundtable will present results of research on this specific type of episodic volunteering; a team of civil society scholars have formulated a survey and is currently administering this in some twenty countries. In this survey we basically ask questions on 1) who are these episodic volunteers, 2) how are they managed and 3) what do they actually do? Next to having country diversity (20+ countries) we also have diversity in sector of volunteering (e.g. sports, fundraising, religion, cultural). This roundtable will address: 1) The complexities of creating a survey that works in this diverse set of countries on the level of concrete examples, activities and organizational setting, 2) The differences between settings for events (sports, fundraising, religion, cultural) and the different volunteers they attract that perform different tasks that have managerial consequences, and 3) The differences between countries in the dataset which offers the unique possibility to compare the countries on this micro level.

K17 Engaging Citizens in Science (Dutch Days)

Emerging Areas of Theory and Practice

Roundtable Discussion

11:00 to 12:30 pm

Room: 9A 16

For over 100 years, hundreds of trained volunteers have been ringing Dutch wild birds and this way of collecting data is gaining ground. Faced with tight budgets, 'Professional' scientists are not complaining, they can see the advantage of having potentially millions of unpaid helping hands. Of course, managing these projects, and subjecting the fruits of the amateur scientists' labours to vigorous scrutiny, involves a lot of work. So, it would be wrong to conclude that citizen science offers researchers an easy way out. At the end of the day, citizen science is still science: if it's to have any validity, it has to be rigorous, well-managed and taken very seriously. This roundtable will consider the Dutch tradition in working with volunteers in science projects, will discuss the kinds of projects that are suitable to the task and the pros & contras of using of volunteers, and will exchange experiences to date.
