Wellness is an ever-evolving, multi-disciplinary, and global field of practice requiring a common standard of practice and an understanding of the competencies required to effectively lead well-being efforts and cultivate positive change. The National Wellness Institute (NWI) Wellness Promotion Competency Model assists wellness professionals—and those who hire and train them—in understanding the knowledge, skills, and attitudes that support professionals’ abilities to build inclusive cultures of well-being for all and to enhance personal wellness across diverse groups of individuals. The model also serves as the standard for NWI’s Certified Wellness Practitioner (CWP) certification.

NWI offers nine e-learning Wellness Promotion Competency Model Courses intentionally designed to support knowledge acquisition and skill-building in five competency domains:

- Authenticity & Self-awareness
- Whole-person & Systems Approaches
- Inclusive & Responsive Practices
- Communication & Connection
- Legal & Ethical Principles

Each interactive, self-paced course includes learning activities and a variety of tools and resources applicable to various wellness-related careers, levels of experience, and professional settings.

The Nine Wellness Promotion Competency Model Courses include:

- Building Self-awareness & Multidimensional Wellness for Personal & Professional Growth
- Leading Well Through Authenticity, Autonomy, and Awareness
- Whole-person and Systems Approaches to Cultivate Wellness
- Person-centered and Strengths-based Approaches to Support Whole-person Wellness
- Establishing Equitable Approaches for Inclusive Wellness Practices
- Inclusive Practices to Influence Healthy Behaviors and Address Barriers
- Communication and Collaboration Strategies for Enhanced Wellness Initiatives
- Using Data and Logic Models to Support Wellness Initiatives
- Legal and Ethical Principles for Wellness Professionals

Worksites that strive to be recognized as a destination for high-achieving employees demand a higher standard of practice, one that can only be accomplished with best-in-class training and ongoing support for those professionals driving the culture of the organization. Positive and nourishing cultures begin with the cultivation of a comprehensive multidimensional and multicultural wellness strategy.

NWI’s Worksite Wellness Specialist Certificate course is the essential training for elevating and advancing a culture of well-being.

Each year, the National Wellness Institute (NWI) trains and supports thousands of wellness professionals who deliver inclusive cultures of well-being for all. NWI’s Worksite Wellness Specialist Certificate course has been the primary vehicle for leaders who are delivering on the goal of activating well cultures. This comprehensive and internationally recognized training goes beyond simply running a wellness program to focusing on the proven methodologies and techniques needed to shift the mindsets, behaviors, and practices of any workforce.

Key takeaways include:
- Developing the business case for comprehensive worksite wellness strategies
- Applying foundational principles and best practices for successful initiatives
- Identifying key drivers and using data to support multidimensional wellness
- Using inclusive and effective communication methods to promote optimal well-being

Positively influencing others and bringing about long-lasting and beneficial change is a life skill that is necessary for many situations. In the well-being field, it’s important for real success to know how to help people practice the healthy habits we promote, not just talk about them. This certificate guides wellness champions and leaders who have struggled to get others to take action in any environment. Offered in collaboration with Virtuositeam, the self-paced course brings tools, techniques, and evidence-informed influence methods to the forefront through four Contexts: Spaces, the Self, Systems, and Social.

NWI’s Change Agent Certificate Course prepares professionals and champions to improve the wellness-related behaviors of the populations they serve.

Key takeaways include:
- Explaining the art and science of influence and how it plays out in our daily lives
- Utilizing specific tools and techniques proven to be successful in promoting change
- Creating higher levels of engagement in businesses, communities, and teams
- Becoming a more effective change leader
