Vision & Strategy 2019 - 2024

Director of RIN, John Pottle, summarises the vision strategy set out by Professor Terry Moore, President at the recent RIN Annual General Meeting this July.

Your Institute's health has been reviewed by Council and, financially, by the Auditors. Result: alive and kicking. For example, more people are interacting with us online and in social media; membership is on an upward trend; the first RIN Chartered Engineer registrations have been successful; we are gaining financial strength and security.

With this solid starting point, Council set out, last July, to review the strategy and to answer some key questions for the future, including: What more can we do against our Royal Charter objectives? How can we be more relevant and engaged in today's world? How can we broaden involvement in the Institute? In other words, how can we prepare the Institute for the future?

The answer to these questions, in the form of the Institute's new vision and 5-year strategy, was presented by the President at the recent Annual Meeting. The strategy was developed over 7 months which included analysis, stakeholder input, workshops and Committee reviews as well as reviews by the Institute's Council.

The Institute's new vision is intended to capture, in just a few words, what we are aiming for:

I hope the vision speaks for itself? The intent is to capture the value in bringing people together, particularly across disciplines. We strive to be, and to be seen to be, inclusive and welcoming to all. The broad nature of the statement "a more navigable world" is also intentional, reflecting the broad scope of the Institute's activities and engagements.

Our mission is to unite in one body those interested in navigation, and to advance the art, science and practice of navigation and to promote knowledge in navigation and its associated sciences, including positioning, timing, tracking and conduct of a journey, whether on, in, over or under land, sea, air or space

Professor Terry Moore, President

The 5-year strategy priorities are defined by three "pillars" (see opposite). The significance of these is that specific activities to achieve the vision are now in place, associated with each of the three areas:

Overall, the aim of the vision and strategy is to provide maximum value to members as an inclusive, modern and highly relevant organisation. We know from our research that most RIN members are proud to be associated with the UK learned society for positioning, navigation and timing and we want this feeling to continue well into the future. Finally – the financial plans for the strategy assume no need to make radical changes to membership costs.

Our vision is to be an inclusive group of diverse disciplines working together for a more navigable world

If you have any questions or comments please do let me, Terry Moore or indeed any member of Council, know. We look forward to sharing updates in these pages as we work together towards the new vision. Thank you for your support.

Our Strategy

Learned Society

To enable insights through bringing disciplines and stakeholders together

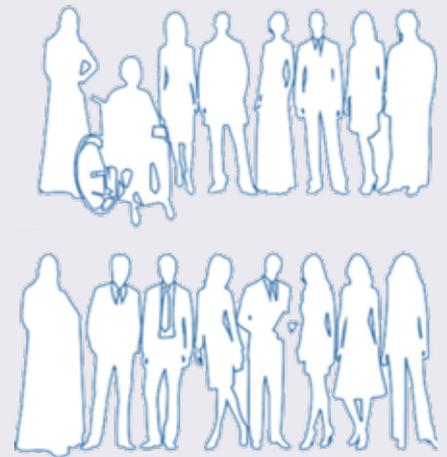

Professional Body

To offer a supportive and straightforward approach to professional engineering registration

Diverse and inclusive

To offer an environment where everyone is welcome and can contribute and benefit

What does the strategy mean for RIN Members?

- Membership of an inclusive, modern, highly relevant Institute
- “Proud to be a member” feeling continues
- Opportunities to interact with a broader demographic and more disciplines
- No plans to make radical changes to membership costs
