

National Solid Wastes Management Association's

LANDFILL INSTITUTE

The Landfill Institute is a policy-making group within the National Solid Wastes Management Association. Current NSWMA members who own or operate landfills, or are consultants, engineers or attorneys offering services to landfills, are eligible to belong.

Our activities include:

Advocacy & Lobbying – We represent you before congress and federal regulatory agencies to ensure that proposed rules and studies impacting landfills are protective of our members' interests and the environment. We urge law makers to adopt a sensible approach to the treatment of landfills in planned global warming legislation and to provide tax credits for landfill gas collection and control systems.

Education – We provide information to political leaders, the public and industry about how landfills are designed, built and operated via personal visits and our publications.

Networking – Members share information with one another and at the Global Waste Management Symposium.
