Best Practices: Preamble & Terminology

Preamble

The Association for Play Therapy (APT) is a national professional society dedicated to the advancement of play therapy in order that clients in need may receive the best possible mental health services. Because its members have a unique and distinctive dedication to and preparation in the theories and techniques of play therapy, APT offers these Best Practices as guidelines for the instruction, supervision, and practice of play therapy.

Play therapists are expected to adhere to any and all state and/or federal laws, state licensing board requirements and the legal and ethical codes promulgated by their primary professional organizations. In the event these Best Practice Guidelines conflict with laws, regulations or other governing legal authority, play therapists are expected to engage in a carefully considered decision-making process, consulting available resources as needed. Play therapists' actions should be consistent with basic principles of human rights. A breach of the standards and principles provided herein does not necessarily constitute legal liability or violation of the law; such action is established in legal and judicial proceedings.

Terminology

Play therapy has been shown to be useful and effective with children, families, groups and individuals across the lifespan. The term 'client' will refer to any of these populations. The term 'legal guardian' will refer to any person who is legally authorized to make decisions regarding a client's welfare. These include, but are not limited to, parents (either single or married), divorced parents who legally retain guardianship, or a court-appointed guardian.

SECTION A: The Therapeutic Relationship

A.1 Commitments and Responsibilities to the Client

Primary Responsibilities

The primary responsibility of play therapists is to conduct therapy that respects the dignity, recognizes the uniqueness and promotes the best interests and welfare of the client. When working with the minors, the best interest may include adjunctive therapy for the significant other(s) in the client's life. Play therapists working with the minor clients understand the unique nature of working with a client whose legal consent is given by another party having power in the client's life. The therapist understands that the minor is their client and represents the minor client, not the legal guardian, in clinical decision making. The play therapist provides a professional disclosure statement that includes information regarding the responsibilities and expectations of the guardian, client and play therapist.

Optimal Growth and Development

Play therapists encourage the advancement of the psychosocial development and positive mental health of clients through play therapy. Play therapists foster the client's interest and welfare which includes securing and supporting nurturing relationships in the client's life.

Therapeutic Treatment Plans

Play therapists will collaborate with the client and/or her/his legal guardian in creating a therapeutic treatment plan. Play therapists may explain the developmentally responsive treatment plan in an understandable manner to the client and/or her/his legal guardian, if applicable. Play therapists review this plan regularly, which should contain measurable outcome goals, to ensure viability, effectiveness, and the continued support of the client and the involvement of significant others in achieving the therapeutic goals.

Documentation

Play therapists follow the state licensing laws and legal and ethical codes of their professional organization regarding the necessary content of their clinical records. In addition, APT recommends that play therapy related ongoing documentation and clinical records include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Developmental history – intake assessment,
- Current developmental level of functioning, i.e. cognitive abilities, play/ social skills, regulation of emotion/behavior, communication skills, daily living skills, and motor skills,
- Level of family functioning and environment assessment,
- Long and short-term goals of treatment,
- Conditions for termination, assessment, & treatment review,
- Client overall functioning in session,
- Observed play themes and materials used,
- Changes in thought process, mood/affect, play themes, and behavior,
- Clinically significant observations of client with significant others,
- Clinically significant observations of significant others when seen separately from the identified child/ client,
- Graphic images relevant to client behavior and goals (e.g. sketches of sand trays, drawings, photographs, video recordings, etc.),
- Verbal and non-verbal expressions relevant to behavior and goals,
- Documentation in all instances when touch is used therapeutically,
- Suicidal or homicidal intent, ideation and/or specific plan, any past history of suicidal or homicidal attempts, as well as threatened or past incidents of aggression towards self or others. If moderate or severe suicidal or homicidal intent, ideation, and/or specific plan is present, a safety plan is included.
- Progress towards goals,
- Obstacles impeding progress in treatment review,
- Interventions and/or coordination with significant others (including family members, teachers, physicians, etc.) in or out of actual session time (e.g. adjunct therapy, referrals, consultations, psychotropic medication review, etc.),
- Medications, medication changes, and medication side effects, and
- Documentation of rationale for and actions taken with regard to complying with state and/or federal laws and guidelines governing mental health practice.

These records, irrespective of the medium in which they are stored (paper, digital, video), are safeguarded in every possible manner in accordance with state and/or federal law, including but not limited to HIPAA, and all legal and ethical codes of their license and professional organization.

Educational Needs

If qualified through training and/or experience, play therapists may work with the client and significant others in considering alternate educational placements that are consistent with the client's overall abilities, physical restrictions, general temperament, interests, aptitudes, social skills, regulation of emotion/behavior, problem-solving abilities, and other relevant individual differences and developmental needs that have become apparent through play therapy. Play therapists are ever mindful of the best interests of the client in recommending alternative educational placements and remain available to consult with professionals and staff in those placements.

A.2 Respecting Individual Differences

Nondiscrimination

Play therapists do not discriminate or condone discrimination based upon age, color, culture, disability, ethnicity, gender, race, religion, political affiliation, sexual orientation, gender identification or socioeconomic status or on the basis of any intersectionality of these identities.

Respect of Individual Differences

Play therapists actively participate in the provision of interventions that show understanding of the diverse cultural backgrounds of their clients. Play therapists will also be cognizant of how their own identity (cultural, ethnic, racial, political, etc.) may influence interventions and therapeutic philosophy. Play therapists make every effort to support and respect the culture and cultural identity of clients and their families.

A.3 Rights of Clients

Inability to Give Consent

Play therapists act in the best interest of the client, whom for reasons of minority age or inability cannot give voluntary informed consent, and adheres to the laws of their state and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding who can provide consent.

Informed Consent

Play therapists inform clients and/or their legal guardian when applicable, of the purposes, goals, techniques, procedural limitations, potential and foreseeable risks, risks of inconsistent compliance, and benefits of the services to be performed. This information will be provided in developmentally (and culturally) appropriate language for the understanding of the client and their legal guardian. Play therapists take steps to ensure that clients, and their legal guardian when applicable, understand the implications of diagnosis, treatment modalities, treatment interventions, the intention of assessment and reports, and fees and billing arrangements.

Clients have the right to expect confidentiality and to be provided with an explanation of its limitations, including disclosure to appropriate legal guardian(s), disclosure as legally required and for safety when an immediate safety risk is revealed, suspicion of child abuse or other safety issue, supervision and/or treatment team case reviews, and requests made by the payer, and/or governmental authority and/or by court order to obtain information about any documents or documentations in their case records. Play therapists seek legal guardian's signature on all consents, including for treatment whenever applicable and when not constricted by state and/or federal laws and their legal and ethical codes of their license and professional organization.

Freedom of Choice

Play therapists recognize that the clients do not always have the freedom to choose whether they enter into the therapeutic relationship or with whom they enter into therapy unless specifically permitted by the state law. However, play therapists will provide the legal guardians of minor clients with the rationale for play therapy while acknowledging that other factors may influence the decisions to seek treatment from a different provider. The play therapist will then assist the client, and legal guardian when appropriate, in choosing whether to enter into a therapeutic relationship and to determine which professional(s) may provide the most appropriate and potentially efficacious treatment regimen at this time with primary consideration for the best interest of the client. Play therapists fully explain restrictions that limit the choices of clients. These restrictions may include, but are not limited to, insurance/payer restrictions or lack of emergency/after-hour services. Play therapists also disclose their credentials, any specialized training, or lack of training, as it relates to the presenting problem(s). Clients may not be able to make the informed decision regarding treatment, but their preferences for the person and approach are taken into consideration as much as possible.

A.4 Clients Served by Multiple Resources

Play therapists must carefully consider the client's welfare and treatment issues when the client is receiving services from another mental health, educational, child welfare, or medical professional. Whenever possible or feasible, play therapists with written permission from the client and/or legal guardian, consult other professional providers to develop clear agreements over coordination of treatment planning in order to avoid confusion about each professional's scope of work, reduce conflict for the client(s), avoid duplicate services, and avoid functioning outside of their role.

A.5 Therapist Needs and Values

Therapist Personal Needs

In a therapeutic relationship, play therapists are responsible for maintaining respect for clients and avoiding actions that meet the therapist's personal or professional needs at the expense of the client. Play therapists are aware of, and avoid imposing, their own values, attitudes, beliefs, and behaviors. Play therapists respect the diversity of clients and their families. Play therapists seek supervision, consultation, personal therapy, and/or training in areas in which they are at risk of imposing their values onto clients and their families, especially when the counselor's values are inconsistent with the client's goals or are discriminatory in nature.

Therapist Personal Values

Play therapists recognize the vulnerability of clients and do not impose personal attitudes and beliefs on their clients. However, this does not mean therapists attempt to conduct therapy free of values. Play therapists intervene when the client's behavior presents a danger to the client or others. Play therapists should also be aware of how their own values, attitudes and beliefs effect their clients. Play therapists seek out supervision, consultation, personal therapy, and / or personal reflection/reading to make sure their own values, attitudes and beliefs do not negatively impact treatment. Lastly, play therapists make every effort to understand clients' and legal guardians' values, attitudes and beliefs (therapy is not about us). convey to clients, and their legal guardians if applicable, the system or basis on which they, as therapists, make value judgments and decisions in therapy. Play therapist do not deny services based on the aforementioned nondiscrimination clause.

A.6 Dual Relationships

Avoidance

Play therapists are alert to and guard against inappropriate multiple-role relationships with current or former clients, their families, and their significant others, including, but not limited to, socializing and business arrangements, with the recognition that such relationships could impair professional judgment, increase the risk of harm to the client or exploit the client through personal, social, organizational, business, political, or religious relationships. Play therapists take appropriate professional precautions through informed consent, consultation, self-monitoring, supervision, and/or documentation in an unavoidable multiple-role relationship to ensure that judgment is not impaired and no harm occurs. If such unavoidable relationships do occur, it is the responsibility of the play therapist to set clear boundaries in settings outside of therapy. In all instances where play therapists are in doubt, consult your licensing code of ethics.

Superior/Subordinate Relationships

Play therapists do not accept as clients the family members of superiors or subordinates with whom they have administrative, supervisory, or evaluative relationships.

A.7 Sexual Intimacies and Touch

Current and Former Clients

Play therapists do not have any type of sexual intimacies with current or former clients and/or their family members. Nor do they counsel the family members of persons with whom they have had or are having a sexual relationship. Play therapists avoid actions intended to meet their own needs and maintain the respect and integrity for the clients and their families and/or significant others.

Encouragement of Intimacies

Play therapists do not encourage inappropriate physical intimacies from current or former clients or the clients' current or former significant others.

Therapeutic Touch

Play therapists recognize the potentially therapeutic value of therapeutic touch, a form of non-sexual touch, in play therapy. However, play therapists do not engage in any form of therapeutic touch without a knowledge of the relevant literature, cultural difference, supervised experience, consideration of the possible benefits and limitations on a case-by-case basis and the informed consent of the client and/or her/his legal guardian, when applicable. Play therapists who are considering the use of therapeutic touch should also be thoroughly familiar with the APT Paper on Touch [APT (2019) Paper on touch: Clinical, professional, & ethical issues] and/or the relevant sections of the legal and ethical code of their professional organization. Play therapists also consults and comply with policies existing within their practice environment (e.g., agency or school setting) with regard to physical contact with clients.

Inappropriate Sexualized Touching of Therapist by Client

Play therapists recognize that clients who have been either sexually abused or inappropriately sexualized may initiate sexualized play with or inappropriate touching of the play therapist. A play therapist who has been inappropriately touched in a sexualized way by a client should take appropriate measures to help the client understand that this type of touch is not appropriate. Play therapists should document and discuss the incident and intervention with the client and/or client legal guardian, engage in peer consultation, and/or consult his/her supervisor if applicable as soon as it occurs.

A.8 Multiple Clients

When the play therapist is called upon to provide services to two or more persons who have a relationship with each other including, but not limited to, siblings, parent and child, extended family members, friends, the play therapist clarifies at the beginning of therapy the potential benefit or disadvantage of doing so. Family members/guardians and others involved in counseling are informed of the parameters and limitations of confidentiality and collateral consent is sought. Confidentiality is extended to all who receives services not just the identified client.

A.9 Group Work

Screening

The play therapist selects clients for group play therapy whose needs are compatible and conducive to the therapeutic process and well-being of each client.

Protecting Clients

Play therapists using group play therapy take reasonable precautions in protecting clients from physical and psychological trauma.

Confidentiality in Groups

Play therapists explain to group members, and/or their legal guardians (when the group includes those who are legally under guardianship) the importance of maintaining confidentiality outside of the group, instruct them in methods for doing so and make special efforts to ensure confidentiality in settings where it may be more readily compromised, such as schools or inpatient/residential treatment settings. Rules for the group and consequence of breaking the rules should be clear to all group members. If a member of the group cannot abide by the rules of the group, consequences need to be enforced for the protection of others.

A.10 Payment

Fee Contract

Play therapists clarify the financial arrangements with the party responsible for the fee prior to entering into a therapeutic relationship with the client. Play therapists charge the usual and customary fees for service, use the appropriate codes for treatment and are aware of the particular ways to code for a play therapy session when using managed care. The play therapist may assist the client to access comparable services or adjust the fees if it creates a financial burden for the client.

If play therapists intend to use legal measures, including collection agencies, for collecting fees in the event of nonpayment, they include such information in their informed consent documents and also inform clients in a timely fashion of intended actions and offer clients the opportunity to make payment.

Bartering Versus Pro Bono

Play therapists refrain from accepting goods or services from the party responsible for the fee, but do consider, on a case-by-case basis, that bartering may be acceptable in certain cultures. Play therapists discuss relevant concerns with clients, if appropriate, and their legal guardians. Play therapists document the bartering agreement in a clearly written contract. Pro bono service is encouraged. Play therapists are aware of the state licensing and their specific code of ethics rules from their professional organizations governing the use of bartering and pro bono service.

A.11 Termination and Referral

Abandonment and Neglect

Play therapists do not abandon or neglect their clients. Play therapists assist in making appropriate arrangements for the continuation of treatment, when necessary, during interruptions. When the interruption is not initiated by the play therapist, a good faith effort is made to re-initiate or terminate treatment.

Inability to Assist Clients

Play therapists may sometimes find that they are unable to provide proper professional assistance to a client or that they are planning to retire or re-locate their practice in the foreseeable future. In such situations play therapist assist in making appropriate arrangements for the continuation of treatment, if possible. Play therapists ensure that appropriate clinical and administrative processes are completed and open communication is maintained with both clients and practitioners. Play therapists facilitate transfers in the best interest of making the change as seamless as possible.

Termination

Play therapists may terminate a therapeutic relationship when treatment goals have been met and/or it becomes reasonably clear that the client is no longer benefiting from treatment, when services are no longer required or are inconsistent, when therapy no longer serves the client's needs or interests, when the responsible party is negligent in paying fees or when the agency or institution in which the treatment is occurring limits or discontinues the therapeutic relationship. In any of these circumstances, play therapists clearly outline the steps that will be taken toward termination, share it with the client and/or guardian of the client and documents it. In all cases the play therapist makes good faith effort to provide proper termination or transition services for the client.

SECTION B: Parents and Family

B.1 Parents

Parents in Conflict

Play therapists comply with state and/or federal laws, court orders, and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization when providing play therapy to children of guardians involved in legal conflicts, such as divorce and custody disputes. This compliance may include reporting abuse, impending and foreseeable harm/danger to the client, or necessary breach of confidentiality. As part of informed consent, when dealing with parents in conflict for situations where legal action regarding custody of children is in process, play therapists clarify the roles they are willing, confident, and/or legally able to participate in. They discuss with parents the negative impact occupying multiple roles could have on the child/therapeutic relationship.

Custodial and Non-Custodial Parents

Play therapists are cognizant of, and recognize that custodial and non-custodial guardians may have specific and differing rights and responsibilities under law for the welfare of their children, including, but not limited to access to records and involvement in treatment planning. To ensure they are adhering to these guidelines, play therapists obtain the proper documentation as it relates to the client, including but not limited to divorce decrees, parenting plans, court documents, or guardianship papers. Play therapists are respectful of all parents and guardians of children even when the given parent or guardian's rights may be limited legally.

B.2 Family

Family Involvement

Play therapists recognize that clients often have family members and other significant adults who have influence in the client's psychosocial growth and development, and strive to gain understanding of the roles and involvement of these other individuals so that they may provide positive therapeutic support where appropriate.

Play therapists will strive for transparency in treatment planning and include parents/caregivers in the formulation of treatment plans and treatment goals when appropriate.

Home-based Intervention

Play therapists make a reasonable effort to ensure privacy for the client and maintain professional boundary with the client/family during home-based therapy sessions and educate parents/family members regarding the need for privacy and confidentiality and maintenance of professional boundary in a home-based therapy session.

Family Interventions

Play therapists make clear when working with families who the client is and how confidentiality will be handled in the context of individual, parent, and family meetings. Limitations to confidentiality and the use of disclosures should be outlined prior to starting therapy.

SECTION C: Confidentiality

C.1 Right to Privacy

Play therapists should refer to the most up to date HIPAA regulations and/or the guidelines from their state licensing laws and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding client confidentiality.

Respect for Privacy for Minor Clients

Play therapists strive to balance respect for the client's right to privacy with guardian's legal right to be and remain informed, and disclose relevant information to guardians except where otherwise prohibited by state law and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organizations. Play therapists follow the dictates of the state and/or federal laws and the ethical code of their professional organization that govern disclosure of confidential information while being mindful of clients' best interests. Play therapists release only that information that is relevant, upon request of outside parties, once the client and/or legal guardian(s) has signed proper releases.

Client Assent

Play therapists provide developmentally appropriate informed consent to clients and their guardians. Play therapists obtain informed consent from appropriate parties by following state and federal laws and rules that govern consent procurement.

When clients do not have the capacity, comprehension, and/or voluntariness to give informed consent, assent must be considered. The ultimate goal of assent is for play therapists to act in the best interests of the client at all times when making clinical decisions. Play therapists treat the client as the primary subject when making clinical decisions.

Waiver of Client's Right to Privacy

Minor clients cannot waive their right to privacy, unless permitted by state and/or federal law, but disclosure of material that is in the best interest of the client may be waived by her/his legal guardian. Minor clients need to be informed in a developmentally appropriate manner of the information being disclosed and the reason for the disclosure.

Legal Requirements

Play therapists keep information confidential except when disclosure is required by law. Play therapists consult with other health care professionals, supervisors, and the applicable legal and ethical code of their professional organization when in doubt. Play therapists also become cognizant of federal and state laws related to confidentiality and comply with it.

Play therapists inform clients and their legal guardians of the limitations of confidentiality and identify foreseeable situations in which confidentiality might be breached. But for authorized exceptions, play therapists also comply with all applicable regulations in the Health Insurance Portability & Accountability Act (HIPAA) and any other relevant regulations and professional guidelines.

Court Ordered Disclosure

When Play therapists are court ordered to release confidential information, they seek legal advice and consult their supervisor if applicable, and in some cases may move to quash the request in order to protect the best interests of their clients. Play therapists should attempt to respond to a subpoena in a way that protects the best interest of the client, except as required by law.

Minimal Disclosure

When circumstances require the disclosure of confidential information, play therapists reveal only information that is germane to the request and only as long as the clinician does not foresee harm as a result of this disclosure. Information that might adversely affect the treatment of the client requires a request for privileged communication.

Subordinates

Play therapists implement reasonable precautions to ensure that all ancillary and support personnel who have access to privileged information maintain privacy and confidentiality of the client.

Treatment Teams

Play therapists disclose the existence of a treatment team and its composition to clients and/or legal guardian(s).

Cooperating Agencies

Prior to sharing information, play therapists take reasonable care to ensure that there are defined policies in other agencies serving the client that effectively protect the confidentiality of the client.

C.2 Group

Play therapists providing group therapy clarify the limits of confidentiality and the parameters of confidentiality that occur specific to that group therapy intervention. Consequences for violation of the rules need to be explained and enforced, especially in settings where confidentiality may be more easily threatened, such as schools and inpatient/residential treatment settings. (see also section A.9, Confidentiality in Groups)

C.3 Documents

Confidentiality of Documents

Play therapists are responsible for the safety and confidentiality of any documentation they create, maintain, transfer, or destroy, whether the records are written, recorded, digitized, or stored in any other medium. Play therapists are expected to adhere to their respective state laws regarding document retention and destruction.

Permission to Electronically Document or Observe

Play therapists obtain written permission from clients and/or their legal guardians before video or audio recording or observing the session and/or identify the use or purpose of the recorded media, how it will be stored, and procedures for disposal.

Public Use and Reproduction of Client Expression and Therapy Sessions

Play therapists do not make or permit any public use or reproduction of the client's play, artwork, music, or other creative expression through audio or video recording, photography, or otherwise duplicating or permitting a third-party observation without the written informed consent of the client and/or the legal representative of the client. Play therapists request written permission from clients and/or legal guardians to display their artwork in the playroom, and such shall have no identifying information about the client. Play therapists should be mindful of displaying in the playroom any artwork or expressive creation from the child as this could feel violating to the child or other children. If such a display happens and proper consent has been secured, the play therapist should be mindful of the therapeutic reasons for displaying created works.

Client Access

Play therapists provide access to copies of the records when requested to do so by the client and/or legal guardian(s). Access to documents is limited to those parts of the documents that do not include confidential information related to another client and to the documents created by the play therapist and client in the course of treatment. The sharing of documents obtained from third parties (such as past providers, physicians, school) is prohibited unless state law and/or the regulations of your professional organization would otherwise allow such information to be shared.

Disclosure or Transfer

Play therapists obtain written permission from the client (e.g., emancipated teen) and/or legal guardian(s) of the client to disclose or transfer records to legitimate third parties unless doing so would compromise the client.

SECTION D: Professional Responsibility

D.1 Knowledge of Standards

Play therapists maintain current and accurate knowledge of state and/or federal statutes, regulations, and ethics codes. Play therapists are responsible for reading and understanding these Play Therapy Best Practices.

D.2 Professional Competencies

Boundaries of Competence

Play therapists practice only within the scope of their competence. Competence is based on: training, supervised experience, professional credentials (state, national, and international), and professional experience. Play therapists commit to knowledge acquisition and/or skill development pertinent to working with a diverse client population.

New Areas of Specialty

Play therapists practice a new specialty after appropriate education, training, and supervised experience. Play therapists take steps to ensure the competence of their work while developing skills in the new specialty.

Employment Qualifications

Play therapists accept employment for positions only for which they are qualified. Qualifications are determined by education, training, supervised experience, professional credentials (state, national, and international), and professional experience. Play therapists hire only individuals who are qualified and competent.

Monitor Effectiveness

Play therapists monitor their effectiveness as professionals and pursue ongoing peer consultation, training, education, and/or supervision.

Ethical Consultation

Play therapists consult relevant code of ethics, professional standards, state and/or federal laws, with knowledgeable professionals and/or supervisors concerning questions regarding ethical obligations or professional practices. Play therapists use and document, as appropriate, an ethical decision-making model. Play therapists also consider principles; generation of potential courses of action; deliberation of risks and benefits; and selection of an objective decision based on the circumstances and welfare of all involved.

Continuing Education/Training

Play therapists acquire continuing education to maintain awareness of current research and best practice in play therapy, are open to incorporating new assessment and treatment procedures, and keep current with research regarding diverse and /or special populations with whom they work. Play therapists ensure that they have on-going training in multicultural issues.

Therapist Impairment

Play therapists refrain from providing play therapy when their physical, mental, or emotional condition/state might harm or negatively affect a client or others. Play therapists are aware of signs of impairment in self or colleagues with whom they work, seek assistance, set limits on their practice, and suspend, and/or terminate their professional responsibilities if necessary. Play therapists assist colleagues in recognizing their own professional impairment and provide consultation and assistance when warranted with colleagues showing signs of impairment and intervene as appropriate to prevent imminent harm to clients.

D.3 Advertising and Soliciting Clients

Accurate Advertising

Play therapists and their employees accurately represent their competency, education, training, and experience relevant to the practice of play therapy. Play therapists can only advertise the highest degree earned in a mental health or closely related field.

Testimonials

Play therapists do not solicit testimonials or professional reviews from clients nor respond to reviews posted. However, when such are freely offered by the client and/or legal guardian(s), the play therapist makes every effort to protect the client or guardian's identity and confidentiality.

Statements by Others

Play therapists strive to ensure that statements made by others about them, their service, or the profession of play therapy are accurate.

Professional Association Involvement

Play therapists are encouraged to be actively involved in local, state, and national associations that promote the development, effectiveness, and improvement of play therapy.

D.4 Credentials

Credentials Claimed

Play therapists represent only professional education/training earned and take responsibility for correcting any misrepresentations. Professional APT credentials include:

- J. Doe, Registered Play Therapist
- J. Doe, Registered Play Therapist-Supervisor
- J. Doe, School Based-Registered Play Therapist

Credential Guidelines

Registered Play Therapists, Registered Play Therapist-Supervisors, and School-Based Registered Play Therapists, adhere to the credentialing guidelines that have been set forth by the Association for Play Therapy. Play therapists never misrepresent their credentials, and notify the Association for Play Therapy when they discover a colleague who is. It is the responsibility of the credential holder to maintain awareness of the states protected acronyms and only market and or reference themselves as appropriate by state law.

D.5 Public Responsibility

Nondiscrimination

Play therapists do not discriminate against clients, legal guardians, students, or supervisees based upon their age, color, culture, disability, ethnicity, gender, race, religion, political affiliation, sexual orientation, gender identification, or socioeconomic status.

Third Party Reports

Play therapists strive to minimize bias, present accurate information, and put forth honest reporting in disclosing their professional activities and assessments to appropriate third parties.

Media Presentations

Play therapists providing advice or comment through public lectures, presentations, and media programs take precautionary measures to ensure that: 1) information is based on current models of practice and relevant research; 2) information is consistent with these practice guidelines; and 3) receiving the information does not mean that a professional therapeutic relationship has been established.

Exploitation

Play therapists never use the power of their positions to exploit their clients and/or their significant adults for unearned or unfair gains, advantages, goods, or services.

D.6 Responsibility to Other Professionals

Different Approaches

Play therapists respect theoretical approaches to play therapy that diverge from their own. Play therapists are aware and acknowledge traditions and practices of other professional disciplines.

Personal Public Statement

Play therapists clarify that they are speaking from their own distinct personal and professional perspectives and that they are not speaking on behalf of APT, state branches, other play therapists or the field of play therapy, when offering a personal statement in public context.

Clients Served by Others

Play therapists obtain written authorization from clients to release client information to other professionals and seek to establish collaborative professional relationships in the best interest of the client.

SECTION E: Relationships with Other Professionals

E.1 Relationships with Employers and Employees

Definition of Role

Play therapists delineate for their employers and employees the boundaries, limitations, and levels of their professional roles.

Covenants

Play therapists may choose to establish working agreements with supervisors, colleagues, and subordinates regarding Play Therapy Best Practices, including, but not limited, to workload, reciprocal responsibilities and accountability. Such agreements are specified and made known to those affected.

Disruptive or Damaging Conditions

Play therapists inform their employers about disruptive or damaging conditions in the work setting that affect their ability to carry out their professional responsibilities as a play therapist in an effective and ethical manner.

Peer Review

Play therapists seek out and participate in professional review and evaluation by supervisor, employer, or peer group as needed.

Professional Development

Play therapists are available for providing professional development to staff regarding the benefits and limitations of play therapy.

Goals

Play therapists communicate their goals to staff and other professional associates when requested and/or when appropriate.

Professional Conduct

Play therapists make every effort possible to maintain professional conduct in the work setting.

Play therapists do not engage in exploitive relationships with supervisees, students, staff, or other subordinates.

Employer Policies

Play therapists strive to reach agreement with employers regarding these Play Therapy Best Practices that allow for changes in institutional policy conducive to the therapeutic relationship.

E.2 Fees for Referral

Accepting Fees from Agencies

Play therapists refuse a private fee or remuneration for providing services to persons who are entitled to such services through the play therapist's employment setting.

Play therapists do not accept referral fees.

E.3 Subcontracting

Play therapists subcontracting play therapy services to a third party inform clients of the limitations of confidentiality prior to or during the intake session.

SECTION F: Evaluation, Assessment, and Interpretation

F.1 General

Play therapists recognize the limitations of their competence and perform only those assessment services for which they are trained and in accordance with the legal and ethical code of their professional organization, and primary licensing/certification body. Play therapists provide the client and legal guardian appropriate information about: the assessments including the rationale, steps, and methods for assessment; the person who will receive the assessment results; and/or a feedback session of findings from the evaluation. Play therapists use only current, valid, reliable and client appropriate assessments that take into account age, gender, ability, race, language, and cultural concerns along with any other identified client's characteristics specific to the assessment.

F.2 Proper Diagnosis of Mental Disorders

Proper Diagnosis

Play therapists take special care to provide, when necessary and/or clinically appropriate, a diagnosis of mental disorder(s) and to re-evaluate such diagnoses as more information becomes available or treatment progresses. The appropriateness of making any diagnosis should consider the broad base of impacts (positive and negative) that may reasonably result from such an action.

Sensitivity to Individual vs. Group Differences

Play therapists recognize that culture, gender, developmental age, and chronological age affect how clients' symptoms are defined. Play therapists are sensitive to the effect of both individual and group differences on the context of the client's life and the manifestation of their symptoms.

SECTION G: Education

G.1 Educators and Trainers (see also section J.5, Distance & Online Supervision)

Educators as Teachers and Practitioners

Play therapists are encouraged to facilitate education and clinical training as described in these Play Therapy Best Practices.

Relationship Boundaries with Students and Supervisees

Play therapists clearly define and maintain ethical and professional relationships with their students and supervisees. Being aware that a differential in power exists, play therapists explain to students and supervisees the potential for an exploitative relationship.

Sexual Relationships

Play therapists never engage in sexual intimacies with students or supervisees and never subject them to sexual harassment.

Contributions to Research

Play therapists properly assign credit to students or supervisees for their contributions.

G.2 Training Programs

Orientation

Play therapists orient beginning students to program expectations, including, but not limited to, the following: 1) knowledge and competency required for completion of the training; 2) theoretical model(s) to be covered; 3) basis for student evaluation; 4) experiences in self-growth and self-disclosure; 5) clinical experiences, sites, and supervision expectations; 6) dismissal procedures; and 7) current employment prospects for trainees.

Integration of Study and Practice

Play therapists who choose to provide training programs to other professionals, and to play therapists in particular, integrate current scholarly research and whenever possible, evidence-based clinical practice.

Teaching Ethics

Play therapist supervisors or trainers educate students and supervisees with regard to the ethical requirements and standards of the practice related to their discipline and foster an understanding of how such ethics and practice standards uniquely apply in the practice of play therapy.

Peer Relationships

Play therapist supervisors ensure that trainees who are involved in peer supervision adhere to the same ethical obligations as play therapy supervisors.

Diversity Issues

Play therapists actively participate in a process by which they strive to: 1) become and remain aware of their own cultural backgrounds, influences, and biases including, but not limited to, religion, political affiliation, gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity, and race; 2) acquire and continuously seek knowledge about how cultural backgrounds, influences, and biases operate in the lives of their clients; and 3) demonstrate culturally responsive therapeutic skills.

Assigning ownership

Play therapists give credit to the work of other researchers and/or clinicians when making presentations that include or reference that work. Proper credit (name and date) shall be attached to all materials and modes of dissemination, including but not limited to, video, handouts, worksheets, and PowerPoint presentations.

SECTION H: Supervision/Consultation

For the purposes of this document, supervision and consultation are defined below. In both cases, the client and/or guardian (when applicable) are to be informed in advance when there will be a sharing of specific treatment/case information.

Supervision

A formal professional clinical role which is recognized and defined by the relevant state law and professional guidelines of the supervisee's professional organization and/or APT. The intent is that the supervision time will be documented and reported to a third party so that it can be applied toward professional licensure, registration and/or certification. As such, the supervisor maintains liability for the supervisee's clinical work.

Consultation

A less formal professional relationship wherein clinical information is shared without liability concerns, between two or more clinicians for the purpose of education or case review and professional advice. Consultation may include the sharing of general ideas and clinical concerns or specific client information.

H.1 Supervisors

Supervision Preparation

Play therapists offering clinical supervision services are adequately trained in supervision methods and supervisory skills.

Responsibility for Services to Clients

Play therapist supervisors ensure that play therapy services provided to clients are professional and of high quality. Play therapist supervisors do not recommend unqualified students or supervisees for certification, licensure, employment, or completion of an academic or training program.

Clinical Supervision Contract

Play therapist supervisors and supervisees should both sign-off on a contract or agreement which specifies the fees for individual and group sessions, how records will be maintained and by whom, the projected numbers of hours of supervision hours to be provided, and how often the supervision sessions will occur.

Both supervisor and supervisee should ensure that the supervisor meets at least the minimum criteria set forth by their professional licensing and state boards, and that the types of supervision meet the same standards.

Appropriate discussion points should include professional liability insurance, compliance with APT Best Practices, State Licensing Board Rules, State Laws, relevant code of ethics, duties of supervisor, duties of supervisee, billing for options for treatment, treatment records and bills, informed consent, dual relationships, termination of supervision, and consultation for the supervisor.

H.2 Consultation

Providing Consultation

Play therapists choosing to consult with other professionally competent people about their clients avoid placing the consultant in a conflict of interest. Play therapists employed in a work setting that compromises this consultation standard consult with other professionals as needed.

Consultant Competency

Play therapists ascertain the organization represented has professional competencies and resources to provide adequate consulting services and referral resources.

Consultant Role

Play therapists who choose to serve as consultants to other mental health professionals should develop a comprehensive understanding of the problem and goals for change, recommend and discuss possible outcomes for their clients, and to encourage growth in independent functioning.

Privacy

In professional consultation, every effort is made to protect client's identity and avoid undue invasion of privacy.

H.3 Supervisees

Limitations

Play therapy supervisors are aware of academic and/or personal limitations of the supervisees; therefore, they provide professional assistance and/or dismissal if appropriate.

Self-Disclosure

Play therapists educate students and supervisees making them aware of the ramifications of self-disclosure, both positive and negative, and ensure adherence to all standards of ethical conduct in doing so.

Therapy for Trainees and Supervisees

If a supervisee requests therapy or a supervisor determines there is a need for the supervisee to obtain therapy, supervisors assist supervisees in identifying appropriate services.

Standards for Supervisees

Play therapy supervisees preparing to become Registered Play Therapists (RPT), Supervisors (RPT-S), or School Based-Registered Play Therapist (SB-RBT) review and become familiar with these Play Therapy Best Practices and, when deemed appropriate, apply them with the same rigor as is expected of those who are Registered Play Therapists and Supervisors and School Based-Registered Play Therapist.

SECTION I: Research and Publication

I.1 Research Responsibilities

Purpose of Research

Play therapy research should be designed to enhance both the knowledge and clinical efficacy base of the discipline and utilize the most appropriate and current empirical and statistical procedures. Play therapist researchers consult with the ethics standards regarding research promulgated by their state licensing boards (consistency with the use of phrase in other sections) and professional organizations. organization,

Use of Human Participants

Play therapists follow guidelines of ethical principles, state and/or federal laws, institutional/agency regulations, and scientific protocol, when planning, conducting and reporting research using human participants. Play therapists conducting research are responsible for the participants' welfare and take reasonable precautions to avoid injurious cognitive, physical, social, emotional and developmental effects on their participants.

Deviation from Standard Practices

Play therapists pursue consultation and abide by rigorous criteria to safeguard research participants when a research problem necessitates deviation from standard research practices.

Principal Researcher Responsibility

The principal play therapy researcher is responsible for ethical research practice; however, co-researchers share ethical obligations and responsibility for their actions.

Minimal Interference

Play therapist researchers take precautions to avoid disruptions in participants' lives.

Diversity

Play therapist researchers take into consideration diversity in research issues with special populations. They seek consultation when needed.

Institutional Research

Play therapist researchers working in school or other institutional settings work closely with the respective Institutional Review Board (IRB).

I.2 Informed Consent

Topics Disclosed

Play therapist researchers use understandable and developmentally appropriate language in obtaining informed consent from research participants.

Both the verbal and written informed consent processes should do ALL of the following:

1. Specifically explains the research purpose and procedures,
2. Identifies experimental or relatively untried procedures,
3. Describes the possible discomforts and risks,
4. Describes expected outcomes,
5. Discloses possible alternatives for participants,
6. Answers any questions about the research procedures,
7. Describes any limitations, and
8. Advises the participants about their rights to withdraw and discontinue at any time.

Deception

Play therapists understand the issues involved in the use of deception in clinical research, and do not conduct a study involving deception unless doing so is justified by the potential benefits and if effective alternate means of conducting the research without deception are not available or feasible (APA Ethical Principles and Code of Ethics, 2002, 2010).

Voluntary Participation

Participation in research is typically voluntary and without penalty for refusal to participate.

Confidentiality of Research Data

Information obtained about research participants is confidential. When there is the possibility that another individual may obtain access to such information, ethical research practice requires that the possibility, together with the plans for protecting confidentiality, be explained to participants.

Persons Incapable of Giving Informed Consent

When a client is incapable of giving informed consent due to barriers of understanding caused by language capacities (expressive and/or receptive), current functioning level, and/or cognitive limitations, play therapy researchers endeavor to provide an explanation to the participant in the simplest and most respectful way possible, and obtain client and/or legal guardian(s) agreement for participation and appropriate written consent.

Commitments to Participants

Play therapist researchers take measures to honor all commitments to research participants.

Explanations of Research Study

Play therapist researchers remove all possible misconceptions regarding the intent of the study and provide safeguards to avoid harm to the client through explanation of the study.

Agreements to Cooperate

Play therapists who agree to be co-researchers or co-authors have an obligation to be complete and accurate with information.

Informed Consent for Grant Providers

Play therapist researchers extend informed consent and in accordance with grant providers guidelines at the outset of the study and continue to do so as conditions of the research study change. Play therapist researchers ensure that feedback and acknowledgment of research is given to grant providers.

I.3 Reporting Results

Information Affecting Outcome

Play therapist researchers clearly describe all relevant variables that may have affected the study outcome. Play therapists avoid engaging in fraudulent research, distortion or misrepresentation of data, or deliberately biasing their results.

Reporting Research Results

Play therapists promote the growth of their profession by reporting negative and positive research results deemed to be of professional value.

Identity of Participants

Play therapist researchers protect the identity of respective participants.

Replication Studies

Play therapists cooperate with researchers wishing to replicate studies/research.

I.4 Publication

Recognition of Others

Play therapists do not commit plagiarism. Play therapists cite previous work on the topic, adhere to copyright laws, and give appropriate credit.

Contributors

Play therapists credit joint authorship, acknowledgments, citations, or other significant contributions to research or concept development. First author is the primary contributor, additional contributors are listed in decreasing order of their contribution.

Student Research

The student is listed as the principle author of a manuscript as appropriate.

Professional Review

Play therapist reviewers must respect the confidentiality and proprietary rights of authors submitting manuscripts.

SECTION J: Use of Technology and Telemental Health

J.1 Online Communication

Play therapists guard the identity of their clients when conducting play therapy or consulting with other professionals online, play therapists take steps to encrypt emails and/or leave out identifying client's information. Play therapists take precautions to ensure the confidentiality of information transmitted through any means.

Email

Play therapists should refer to the most up to date HIPAA regulations and/or the guidelines from their state licensing laws and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding communication via email with clients. They should advise the client/guardian of the risks and should maintain copies of the communication in the client's file.

Text Messaging

Play therapists should refer to the most up to date HIPAA regulations and/or the guidelines from their state licensing laws and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding communication via text with the clients. They should advise the client/guardian of the risks and should maintain copies of the communication in the client's file.

Online scheduling

Online scheduling should be secure and encrypted.

J.2 Web Sites

Play therapists who maintain professional sites online will comply with the ethical standards of their state licensing body, the ethical standards of their discipline, and any applicable state and/or federal laws.

J.3 Social Media

Play therapists clearly explain to their clients, as part of the informed consent procedure, the benefits, limitations, and boundaries of the use of social media.

Play therapists use caution and professionalism when posting information or participating in social media sites. Play therapists: do not post client's information or content from play sessions online; do not make negative comments about the clients online; and maintain appropriate ethical and professional boundaries, including respect for client's privacy. Play therapists should not access a client's or a client's family member's social media account(s) for the purpose of attaining information not provided directly by the client to the play therapist.

J.4 Use of Technology in Session

Play therapists who utilize or plan to utilize either computer or internet applications in play therapy, including but not limited to social networking sites, become fully aware of the potential benefits and limitations of this technology, and review the content to ensure appropriateness. Play therapists employ software and hardware tools that adhere to security best practices and applicable legal and ethical standards for the purposes of protecting privacy and ensuring that records are not lost or damaged. Play therapists should refer to the most up to date HIPAA regulations and/or the guidelines from their state licensing laws and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding the use of technology in session.

Also, play therapists ensure that:

1. The client is developmentally capable of using and benefiting from the technology by following professional practice guidelines in relation to the chronological age of the youth as well as consideration of the developmental age,
2. The technology that is appropriate to the clinical application,
3. The technology meets the needs of the client and is culturally appropriate,
4. The client or guardian understands the purpose and operation of the technology,
5. The use of the technology is consistent with the treatment goals,
6. The client and guardian fully understand the potential benefits and limitations of the technology,
7. All possible efforts are made to protect the client's identity that may otherwise be compromised through the use of the technology,

8. Confidentiality issues and applicable state and/or federal guidelines, and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding the use of technology is carefully reviewed with the clients and guardians of minor clients,
9. When utilizing technology for parent/legal guardian consultation, the play therapists will provide all parties with a written informed consent.

J.5 Use of Telemental Health in Play Therapy

Play therapists are encouraged to seek training, supervision, educational opportunities, and peer mentorship in order to establish and maintain high quality telemental health care.

When utilizing technology for treatment and consultation, the play therapists will provide all parties with a written telemental health informed consent, which is an adjunct to the normal informed consent document. Informed consent should be obtained as an in-person signed agreement. An electronically signed document (via a HIPAA compliant platform), or verbally obtained with: a) a plan to follow up with a written consent (i.e. returned via the postal service); and b) a documentation regarding the rationale of the document could not be signed in person, who was present, whether or not verbal consent was given, and the plan to follow up with an original signature signed document.

The client or guardian is responsible for creating a safe and confidential space during play therapy sessions. The environment should facilitate the assessment or the play session, particularly of younger children, by providing an adequate room size, furniture arrangement, toys, and activities that allow the youth to engage with the accompanying parent and provider and demonstrate developmental age-appropriate skills. The environment should also be difficult or impossible for people outside the space to hear the interactions. Play therapists assist the client and guardian if they are unsure how to do this.

The client and guardian fully understand the potential benefits and limitations of the telemental health through the use of technology.

- These benefits include but not limited to: accessibility to services in places that may not otherwise be available, may be more convenient and less prone to delay than in person meetings, offer an alternative when unable to travel to the play therapist's office, more suited for the clients that are accustomed to technology, less self-consciousness, increased personal space, decreased confidentiality concerns as the play therapist is outside the community, and make improved progress on play therapy goals that may not have been otherwise achievable without telemental health.
- These limitations include but not limited to: technical and equipment failures, possible risks to confidentiality, and un-availability of play therapists to directly intervene in crisis management or emergencies.

Telemental health is not a good fit for every client. Play therapists will evaluate before providing telemental health therapy to the clients and continuously assess if working via telemental health is appropriate for the clients and their families.

- If it is not appropriate, play therapists will help the client or guardian find alternative options to continue services. If the client or guardian raises questions or concerns about using telemental health, play therapists will not terminate services, but will work with the client and/or guardian to resolve challenges.
- Client and guardian reserve the right to stop receiving telemental health services at any time without prejudice.
- Client, guardian, and/or play therapist will not record telemental health sessions or take screenshots or other visual images without prior written informed consent from all parties. If play therapists wish to record the play therapy session, they will explain the purpose, methodology, and safe-keeping practice.
- A plan for backup communications in case of technology failures and a plan for responding to emergencies and mental health crises during the initial phase of treatment.
- The identification or verification of client's physical location in the beginning of each session, in case an emergency, or mental health crisis arises. Play therapists document the address in the clients' records.

- Play therapists consider the competence in the use of technology of the clients and how bandwidth, screen size, and camera functionality all affect the youth's developmental assessment, including, appreciation of motor skills, language abilities, interests, and relatedness.

When conducting a telemental health session to an out-of-state or international client, play therapists will review and comply with relevant federal and state laws, individual licensing requirements and limitations, and international standards.

J.6 Distance and Online Supervision (see also section H, Supervision/Consultation)

Play therapists should refer to the most up to date HIPAA regulations and/or the guidelines from their state licensing laws and/or legal and ethical code of their professional organization regarding providing distance and online supervision.

Supervisors and supervisees who engage in distance supervision take precautions to ensure that the client's or the supervisee's confidentiality is not compromised and that both the supervisor and the supervised are competent in the technologies being utilized to facilitate a secure supervision. Play therapists are responsible for ensuring that distance supervision meets the governing laws and ethics of both the supervisor and the supervisee's state laws.

The supervisor may consider the range of telemental health training resources (e.g., online resources, readings, guidelines, and etc.) to support the supervisee's learning experience. In addition, videoconferencing-based supervision or "telesupervision," offers innovative ways to extend supervision opportunities.
