AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF HEART FAILURE NURSES (AAHFN) and (YOUR MEDICAL CENTER) CELEBRATES CERTIFIED HEART FAILURE NURSE (Your City, State, & Date) - (Your medical institution) announced that (you & title) has become a Certified Heart Failure Nurse (CHFNP). The AAHFN marked another opportunity to qualify in AAHFN-CB's heart failure nurse certification program (Certified Heart Failure Nurse: CHFNP). Currently, candidates are able to participate in the exam by way of the Annual Conference in June or local computer based testing. There are now 1,209 CHFNP and 42 CHFNP-K worldwide, representing all but two states in the US, including eight from Canada, two from Bermuda, 1 from Puerto Rico, and one from the United Arab Emirates.

This program (www.heartfailurecertification.com), developed by the AAHFN Certification Board (AAHFN-CB), provides a CHFNP credential and demonstrates, by examination and application criteria that includes contemporary heart failure education and practice requirements, that the registered nurse has acquired a core body of specialized knowledge in heart failure and disease management. The purpose of this certification is to promote the highest standards of practice within the specialty, validate attainment of a common knowledge base required for practice, and encourage and promote continued educational growth. "With the increasing heart failure patient population it is more important than ever to have certified heart failure nurses. This certification acknowledges that the nurse has the level of expertise needed to provide the highest quality of care our patients deserve," said Denise Buxbaum, BSN, RN, CHFNP, Chair of the AAHFN-CB.

"Heart failure nursing certification signifies superior knowledge and decision-making in the care of heart failure patients," said Kelly Stamp, PhD, ANP-C, RN, CHFNP-K, FAHA, President of AAHFN.
