

CALL FOR PAPERS

Hispania, the scholarly journal of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese (AATSP)

Digital Humanities in Spanish and Portuguese, Special Issue
*Abstract Submission Deadline: April 1, 2020

This special issue of Hispania seeks to detail the intersections between Digital Humanities (DH) and Modern Languages (ML). Drawing on Matthew Kirschenbaum's (2010) seminal article on DH and English departments and recent approaches including "critical DHML" (Pitman and Taylor 2017) and "global DH" (Galina Russell 2015), this special issue will address DH work in the fields of Iberian, Portuguese and Brazilian, Caribbean, Transatlantic Latinx, and Latin American Studies as related to theory and practice, methodological implications of practices, and/or experimental pedagogy. The volume aims to critically articulate interactions with the digital in order to highlight the broad spectrum of global approaches to DH and to offer new ways of engaging with research and teaching in (or about) Hispanophone, Lusophone, and immediate contexts. The special issue will also decipher how inter-, multi-, and transdisciplinary approaches to DH, both practical and theoretical, contribute to the long standing place and history of humanistic inquiry in these areas into the 21st century.

Topics may include, but are not limited to:

- The impact(s) of digital scholarship and/or examples of digital projects
- Challenges and critical approaches to the hegemony of the English language in digital communications for (and from) research and teaching
- Teaching digital humanities courses in ML departments (skills, tools, methods)
- Challenges and case studies implementing DH methodologies in Hispanophone, Lusophone, and immediate contexts (distant reading, text mining, topic modeling, digital editing, mapping, visualization, etc.)
- The role of ML within the creation of general DH certificates at undergraduate and graduate levels
- DH and Community Engagement
