ACSP ADMINISTRATORS CONFERENCE ADDRESSES CRITICAL ACADEMIC PLANNING ISSUES

Earlier this month, the ACSP held its biannual Administrators Conference hosted by the Committee on the Academy. This two-day networking event focused on critical issues facing planning programs in the 21st century such as ending discrimination, fostering belonging, leading during a crisis and globalizing urban planning.

According to Renia Ehrenfeucht, University of New Mexico, who is the chair of the CoA and one of the conference organizers, "The conference focused on conversations that are critical to ACSP member schools now: ending discrimination, globalizing our curricula and fostering belonging. We appreciated hearing from our Deans about their leadership. We hope to continue these important conversations among ourselves and at our fall conference."

More than 90 administrators and 20 speakers were in attendance for this information-packed program featuring the multiple workshops and networking sessions. Program details can be viewed here.

"This year the ACSP Administrators Conference featured a deep dive into the opportunities and methods for integrating international planning into undergraduate and graduate planning curricula. It was a unique opportunity to discuss "This workshop has been a magnum opus -- THANK YOU for putting together such a cornucopia of knowledge," shared Rolf Pendall, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, at the conclusion of the "Globalizing Planning Education" workshop.

Thank you to all the committee members, speakers and participants for all of your efforts in putting together this informative conference.

We would appreciate participant feedback!
For the first time ACSP used a live-captioning and transcription service for the conference -- something we hope to incorporate in future conferences. We also debuted Remo events! Hosted by Harvard University, Remo is a live, virtual event networking space that allowed for real-time, how and why the inclusion of international and comparative planning is fundamentally linked to centering diversity within planning education and research,” remarked Jennifer Clark, The Ohio State University.
