PLANNING DURING AND AFTER THE COVID-19 PANDEMIC

Please join us for a panel discussion!

April 24 at 1 pm MDT (9 am HST/12 pm PDT/ 2 pm CDT/ 3 pm EDT).

What does the COVID-19 pandemic mean for planning? Planning is forward thinking, adaptive, and skilled at both shaping change and responding to disruptions. Will planning be different in response to the COVID-19 pandemic and in anticipation of future disruptions that may become more frequent given the changing climate? How do we work for greater social and environmental justice in these situations?

Panelists include: Marisa Zapata, Portland State University; Laura Harjo, The University of New Mexico; Jeffrey Lowe, Texas Southern University; Samina Raja, University at Buffalo; Shannon Van Zandt, Texas A&M University and Rob Olshansky, University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign.

This is the first webinar in series by ACSP Committee on the Academy for our members, focusing on how our departments and planning can respond to the global COVID-19 pandemic.

The panel discussion will be recorded and available to watch later.
