Designing Curriculum for Teaching Fully Online....

Now that we're past panic mode, we're beginning to rethink how content can and should be delivered in an online environment. However, not all of us have training in how to shift content delivery and assessment in this new medium. Below, please find two short recorded workshops and one THIS WEEK from World Leadership School that will help refine how we educate in an online environment.

Giving Your Students A Voice in Distance Learning

Even with a shift to a digital learning space, all of your students should have the opportunity to share their voice. Don't let shy or reluctant students "slip between the cracks" and miss out on fully engaging and participating in your synchronous or asynchronous classes. This 48-minute webinar with Nathan Lutz will show you how.

Nine Tips to Guide Successful Online Sessions with Your Students

Let's face it. Doing anything online is different from connecting in person, but that doesn't mean it has to be more difficult or less effective. This interactive, 45-minute session with Susan Lambert will help educators learn to connect with their students in new ways and will focus on the fundamentals of relationship- building and instruction through a digital platform.

This Week: Understanding Project-Based Learning in the Online Classroom

The benefits of utilizing Project-Based Learning [PBL] in a classroom setting are innumerable. However, there has been little practice in using this pedagogical model in an online or remote setting. This week-long professional learning course will take you step-by-step through the process of transitioning your PBL into an online and blended learning platform. Each day we will explore different components of the WLS Wheel of Pedagogy with examples and time to design components of a PBL unit specific to your classroom and your students.

The online course will be facilitated by Dr. Shayna Cooke, Director of Educator Development with World Leadership School. Certificates of completion will be offered on request for certified professional learning hours.
