

Roundtable: The Future of Project Management – How close are we to full automation?

Moderators

Sophie Halbeisen, Director of Business Development, Plunet Inc.

Presentation Description

In an open roundtable session, we are discussing the current state of project management in the translation industry and which scenarios are realistic for the foreseeable future.

In a candid discussion, we want to look at the four pillars of project management and their influence on technological decisions for Language Service Companies:

- 1) The role of the project manager and need for human interaction
- 2) Automation with its costs, risks, and advantages
- 3) Integration of production environments (CAT, MT, NMT)
- 4) Security vs. Automation

Speaker Bio:

Sophie Halbeisen is the Director of Business Development at Plunet Inc. in New York and has been working with the company since January 2014. Her main focus and expertise is workflow consulting for translation project management systems. She has been involved in more than 70 successful new Plunet implementations and manages more than 150 existing client accounts in both North and South America.