AMS 50 Last Call—Success by Baltimore?

As this issue of the Newsletter goes to press, the AMS 50 campaign stands about $38,300 short of successful completion. This amount will qualify us for the last NEH payment and will place our endowment just above the announced goal of $500,000. Approximately 1,025 of the Society's membership of 3,480 have responded to the appeals to date, just short of one-third.

AMS 50 news and a campaign report appear within.

The Campaign Committee very much hopes to announce the conclusion of the AMS 50 campaign at the annual business meeting in Baltimore. Donors whose gifts have been received by 1 October 1988 will be honored during a gala reception and buffet at the Peabody Library on Saturday evening, 5 November.

The AMS 50 campaign is not over yet. We need 380 new gifts of $100 or more to be successful: nearly as many new gifts as we have received since the New Orleans meeting. The time to act is now. A pledge card is included in this mailing.

BALTIMORE 1988

Baltimore, built around a beautiful harbor on the Chesapeake Bay, will be the site of the 54th Annual Meeting of the American Musicological Society, 3–6 November 1988, held jointly with the Society for Music Theory. The University of Maryland, College Park and the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, in conjunction with The Peabody Conservatory of Johns Hopkins University and Towson State University, will serve as host institutions.

The meeting will take place at the Omni International Hotel, located in the heart of downtown Baltimore and only a short stroll via a skywalk to the restored Inner Harbor, which contains a multitude of shops and restaurants virtually on the water's edge, as well as the eighteenth-century frigate, Constellation, the flagship of the United States Navy, and the world-famous Aquarium.

The AMS Program, Performance, and Local Arrangements Committees have been working closely with their counterparts in the SMT. The Program Committees have agreed on a number of joint sessions that stress the community of interests between our two Societies.

In addition to papers that run from Ethiopian Chant to Harry Partch, there will be several special presentations. On Saturday, Leonard Meyer will give an SMT Keynote Address. At noon on Friday, a special panel including Malcolm Frager, pianist, and David Zinman, Music Director of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, will discuss Beethoven's tempi. On Friday night the Baltimore Symphony with Malcolm Frager will perform an All-Beethoven Concert at the new Meyerhoff Hall, followed by a special reception for AMS/SMT members. Also of note is the session on C. P. E. Bach in this the 200th anniversary of his death. This will be complemented by a noon-hour concert of C. P. E. Bach's music by Eiji Hashimoto and Evelyn Garvey. Other noon-hour concerts will feature music from the Liber Sancti Iacobi performed by Anonymous 4, the music of Heinrich Schenker performed by an ensemble from the Hartt School of Music with an introduction by Patrick Miller, and a lecture-recital on Schubert's models in songwriting by Will Crutchfield with Debra Vanderlinde.

Don Randel, Chair
Robert Bailey
Kristine Forney

Upcoming Annual Meetings

Beginning this year, the Calendar of Annual Meetings will appear in the Directory, rather than the Newsletter.

New 1989 Deadline for Greenberg Award

Beginning in 1989, the deadline for submissions for the Greenberg Award will be 1 February, rather than 1 April.

Report of the Chapter Fund Committee

This year the Chapter Fund Committee has been able to respond to all requests for subventions. Twelve chapters received funds for travel to New Orleans by Student Representatives to the National Council and for extraordinary expenses of chapter meetings, such as expenses of guest speakers. The Committee urges all chapters to take advantage of this assistance provided by the Society for their operations.

Present members of the Committee are Peter Bergquist, Frank Kirby, and Courtney Adams, who assumed the position of chair as of July. Requests from chapters for subventions should therefore now be addressed to Courtney Adams, Chair, AMS Chapter Fund Committee, Department of Music, Franklin and Marshall College, P.O. Box 3003, Lancaster, PA 17604-3003.

Grant from the NEH to COPAM has recently assured that intensive preparatory work will soon bear fruit in the first volumes of a new series, the first of its kind, to be called Music of the United States. It should also be made clear that COPAM will be wide open to suggestions and proposals made by scholars of American music affiliated with other groups, including the Sonneck Society and the Center for Black Music Research. All interested parties should get in touch with Richard Crawford or other members of the COPAM Committee (see the current AMS Directory for its membership).

The same variety of interests and specialties flooded the Chapter meetings of 1986-87 with papers on musicological topics of every conceivable type, from Znamenyy chant to Rachmaninoff's Vespers; from Dorian and Phrygian to Schenker and Schoenberg; from Pierre de la Rue to the aesthetics of silence. Though somewhere along the line an uninstructive and perhaps ill-advised effort may well be attempting to define the larger directions in which the field is moving, my own sense, from within, is that many bridges are being built that will connect the formerly monolithic center of American musicological studies to fields that formerly seemed distant and apart. The bridges to ethnomusicology are already firm and stable, and it looks to me as if it is only a matter of time before the organization of our professional life reflects the broad peopling of the field with travellers from both sectors, mingling with one another on a regular and productive basis. The bridges to theory are equally solid, for many of us, and they will be thick with use in the next two meetings, at Baltimore this year and at Austin in the next, as the two Societies, AMS and SMT, make common cause in joint meetings. This is the place for me to pay tribute to my professional and departmental colleague, David Lewin, who as President of the Society for Music Theory has done a great deal to bring about these joint meetings. The same thanks are due to the Joint Program Committee of the Society for Ethnomusicology, who have joined with David Lewin and myself in the initial planning for the three-way joint meeting that will take place in Oakland in 1990. The AMS also extends a cordial welcome to the new President of the Society for Music Theory, Gary Wittlich. As is well known by now, Oakland will have a Joint Program Committee made up of representatives of all three Societies—the whole to be chaired by Bruno Nettl. I should add, parenthetically, that the AMS members of the Joint Program Committee for Oakland 1990 are now Anthony Newcomb and Leo Treitler. Professor Treitler has kindly agreed to serve in place of Margaret Bent, who has had to step down owing to other obligations. All of what I have just described surely makes expansion in American musicology not just the haphazard result of scattered individual initiatives across the country, but a trend that the major societies in our field are attempting to lead and to develop in ways that will be productive to all of us, whatever our territorial identities and intellectual imperatives.

Baltimore, to judge from the meeting of the Program Committee in March of this year, should be a testing-ground for the Program Committees of the AMS and the SMT, which met both separately and together, with first-class leadership from the AMS Chair, Robert Morgan, and the SMT Chair, Jonathan Bernard, forged the outline of a meeting that has every expectation of success in meeting the needs of both musicologists and theorists, gathering not only under one roof but in a number of joint sessions. At the same time, there will be ample room for musicologists not concerned with the interface with theory to tend to other business. As will be apparent from the preliminary program, it will have the usual large array of musicological papers, by contributors of all stripes.

Surely this same sense of expansion was evident last year at New Orleans in many ways, not only through our meeting jointly with the College Music Society and with the Center for Black Music Research, but in some of the sessions as well. A signal contribution to consciousness-raising was the session on musicological "canons," aimed at defining and challenging some of the traditional intellectual limits on topics and techniques that musicologists use to shape their work. But there were others as well, some of them less explicitly revisionist in their titles and programs but nevertheless contributing to the reshaping of ideas on specific problems and issues, as real scholarship always does. In all, the auguries are towards greater expansion on many fronts, topical and conceptual; towards improved communication with our peers in other larger fields of study; and towards gradual acceptance of necessary change in the boundaries and directions of contemporary musicology. We really have no choice, since the only alternative to having our ship run aground is to sail it as best we can into unfamiliar waters, and, at the same time, in the modern philosopher's metaphor, to keep on rebuilding it as we go.

AMS 50 Campaign Report

1 May 1988

AMS 50 is a capital campaign of the American Musicological Society to fund a program of AMS 50 Dissertation Fellowships. The stated purpose is "to encourage the advancement of research in the various fields of music as a branch of learning and scholarship." The campaign was undertaken in conjunction with the fiftieth anniversary, in 1984, of the American Musicological Society. A major Challenge Grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities was secured in early 1986. The Guidelines for the AMS 50 Dissertation Fellowship Competition are given on page 7 of the Society's Directory.

AMS 50 Campaign Bulletin

A gift of $3,000 was received in late January 1988 from a patron who prefers to remain anonymous. This gift enabled the Society to meet the very difficult NEH challenge requirement for 1987–88.

New donors of $1,000 or more, or those whose additional pledges have placed them beyond the $1,000 plateau include Philip Brett, the Grove Dictionaries, Donald Johns, Elias Kuluukundis, Maria Rika Maniates, Leonard Meyer, Anthony Newcomb, Jeremy Noble, Harrison Powell, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Rowley, Leo Treitler, Milos Velimirovic, William Warfield, Robert Winter, and Eugene and Jean K. Wolf. Previous $1,000 donors who have made further gifts of $1,000 or more include Margaret Bent, the William Byrd Press, W. Hal Hinkle, and D. Kern Holoman.

New memorial gifts include commemorations of Manfred Bukofzer, Vincent Duckles, Hans Moldenhauer, Robert S. Tangeman, Homer Ulrich, and William G. Waite. Gifts were also received from the Rocky Mountain and South Central Chapters in memory of Albert Seay and Almonde Howell, Jr., respectively.

The Midwest Chapter voted at its spring meeting to contribute a handsome sum from its chapter budget. Among noted performing artists who have contributed in the recent past are the following members of the Indiana University faculty: Thomas Binkley, Enrica Cavallo, Paul Eliot, Wendy Gillespie, Franco Gulli, Marilyn Keiser, William Roberts, James Starker, and James Tocco.

A very successful benefit concert of early American song was given at the University of North Carolina by Jon Finson and associates. Benefit concerts scheduled as of 1 May 1988 include a May 1988 recital by Curtis Lasell, organist of the Princeton University Chapel, and one by Malcolm Bilson, fortepiano, sponsored by the Greater New York Chapter.

The Campaign Committee continues to welcome further suggestions of names of individuals or organizations whose commitment to the goals of American musicology makes it appropriate to invite their support of this significant and in many ways historic venture.

AMS 50 Fellowship Awards

Two winners have been selected for the AMS 50 Fellowship Awards for 1988–89. They are Steven C. Krantz of the University of Minnesota and Thomas Sipe of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Krantz’s dissertation concerns “Rhetorical and Structural Functions of Mode in the Motets of Josquin des Prez.” Mr. Sipe’s dissertation is entitled “Interpreting Beethoven: History, Aesthetics, and the Critical Reception of the Eroica Symphony, the ‘Appassionata’ Sonata, and the C-Major ‘Razumovsky’ Quartet.”

A jury of three members drawn from the AMS 50 Fellowship Committee selected the two winners from a group of strong candidates working in a variety of fields and representing universities across the United States and Canada.

Soviet-American Symposium in Musicology

A Soviet-American Symposium entitled "Recent Trends in Musicological Studies in the USA and the USSR" will take place from 31 October to 1 November 1988 at Tufts University. The Symposium is part of the agreement signed in June 1987 by the Union of Soviet Composers and a special Commission on Music Composition and Musicology constituted with the authority of the ACLS and administered by IREX. A delegation of five Soviet and five American musicologists will participate in the Symposium. Simultaneous translation in English and Russian will be provided.

Members of the American contingent will offer presentations reflecting particular aspects of some recent trends in our field: Charles Hamm (Dartmouth College), "American Studies;" Margaret Murata (University of California, Irvine), "Practice and Theory;" Anthony Newcomb (University of California, Berkeley), "Literary Models for Music Criticism;" Janet Schmalfeldt (Yale University), "Recent Analytical Trends;" and Robert Winter (University of California, Los Angeles), "Sketch Studies."

After the conference, the participants will depart for the AMS/SMT meeting in Baltimore, where the Soviet delegation will present a special session on recent trends in Soviet musicology. The Symposium at Tufts is open to the public. Those wishing to attend should contact Professor Jane A. Bernstein, Soviet-American Symposium, Dept. of Music, Tufts University, Medford, MA 02155.

Report of the Committee on the Status of Women

The Committee on the Status of Women will hold its annual open meeting on Friday, 4 November at 1:00 P.M. We are continuing our policy of guest speakers and would like to thank Ellen Koskoff for her fine presentation on Women and Music in Cross-Cultural Perspective (Greenwood Press, 1987) last year.

This year's speaker will be Dr. Anna Burton, whose topic is "Psychosomatic Views of the Creative Artist: Loss, Conflict and Gender." Dr. Burton is an Associate Clinical Professor at the University of Medicine and Dentistry, Rutgers; the President of the New Jersey Psychoanalytic Society; and a member of the New York Psychoanalytic Institute. She has a longstanding interest in the relationship between psychoanalysis and biography and has contributed two essays on Clara Schumann to the forthcoming Psychoanalytic Explorations in Music (International Universities Press, 1988).

The Committee also took note of the special interest in feminist scholarship stated by this year's AMS Program Committee. In the hope of encouraging interdisciplinary contributions, Committee member Susan Cook mailed a call-for-papers announcement to all member institutions of the National Council for Research on Women. The Committee is also sponsoring an AMS session on "The Implications of Feminist Scholarship for Teaching," organized by Ruth Solie and Susan Cook. It will cover both curricular and pedagogical matters. The meeting will include reports from Committee members on their particular interests and activities, including David Rosenthal, recent promotion and tenure and Kay Shelemay on membership statistics. The Committee also plans to hold a second informal meeting for graduate students (see Julie Cumming) and for those people interested in talking about issues of work and family, exact time and place to be announced.

US-RILM News

Some members of the Society may not yet be aware that a separate office for the collection of U.S. publications for RILM has been in operation at Cornell University since 1984. The new processing center was established to relieve the International RILM Office at the CUNY Graduate Center of handling the large numbers of U.S. contributions (18% of the total in RILM Abstracts, by far the highest number from a single country). Lenore Coral, Music Librarian at Cornell, is the volunteer Director of US-RILM, and Jean Harden serves as Editor.

US-RILM was established with direct grants from the AMS; the U.S. Branch of the International Association of Music Libraries, Archives and Documentation Centers; and the Music Library Association. The Sonneck Society has since joined in contributing to US-RILM. The Steering Committee includes Edmund A. Bowles (MLA), Don Roberts (IAML), Karl D. Kroeger (Sonneck Society), and Samuel F. Pogue (AMS), Chair.

The annual budget, consisting of the part-time salary of the editor and basic supplies, is relatively modest. There is a volunteer staff of abstractors from around the country who prepare abstracts not supplied by authors. Office facilities are donated by Cornell. So far, the burden of annual support has fallen on the shoulders of the three original sponsors and the Sonneck Society, but the Steering Committee wishes to include others who will share the cost and reduce the amount of subvention by the present group. As additional sponsors join, they will be invited to appoint representatives to the Steering Committee. In the meantime, the Committee will seek help from foundations for matching funds.

The Committee, through its Chair, will be happy to hear from any AMS members who can suggest additional sources of support.

—Samuel Pogue, Chair

Committee on Career Options

The recently formed Committee on Career Options of the American Musicological Society is establishing a list of persons trained in musicology (including music theory, ethnomusicology, and related disciplines) and employed full- or part-time in music-related but nonacademic positions, who would be willing to answer inquiries from students interested in similar careers. Only advice, not job placement, is the immediate objective. One purpose of the Committee is to encourage interest in nonacademic careers and thereby to disseminate musicological insights and raise standards of musical appreciation outside academic strongholds.

Persons interested in informally counselling prospective colleagues about such matters as career preparation and responsibilities, employment opportunities and evaluations, future prospects in specific fields, and membership in relevant organizations or networks, are invited to communicate with the Chair of the Committee: Laurence Libin, Department of Musical Instruments, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, NY 10028.

COPAM Report

The Society has received a $106,690 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to plan, organize, and publish a national series of scholarly editions of American music. To be called Music of the United States, the series will include both formal and informal music—from operas and symphonies to popular songs and ethnic folk music. At present, no comprehensive series of authoritative editions of our nation's music exists. "America's music has always provided a rich and diverse source for our cultural identity," said Lynne V. Cheney, Chairman of the NEH, announcing the grant. "The Endowment is pleased to offer support for this important new series which will benefit not only the community of scholars but also, through performances, a broad public audience."

Thegrant will support the project for its first three years, beginning in July 1988. With the help of NEH funds and generous support from the Department of Music of Brown University, the Society will be able to set up project headquarters at Brown. The office will be maintained by the project's editorial coordinator, Wayne J. Schneider. The series will be published by the Society and A-R Editions, Inc. of Madison, Wisconsin.
Last September, with the support of the NEH, COPAM held a conference to gather a wide range of opinion about the contents and structure of the series. A report of that conference is available from the Society's office in Philadelphia. Work has already begun on some editions in the series, and others are in the planning stage. In addition, ideas for series volumes are always welcome. They should be sent to Wayne J. Schneider, c/o Dept. of Music, Brown University, Providence, RI 02912-1924.

Baltimore Consort will present a program of Giovanni Bononcini's Camilla using the original English libretto of the London production. On Friday, the Maryland Handel Festival will present Handel's Samson in Westminster Hall, a Federal period church, with Lorraine Hunt, Gillian Fisher, Jennifer Wynne Post, Molly Donnelly, and Sylvan Muller as soloists, and on Saturday the Pomerion Musices and the Baltimore Consort will present a program of Italian music of the late Renaissance at the Walters Art Gallery. Seating for these concerts will be quite limited.

Other events will include a "champagne" buffet to honor AMS donors. (If you have not yet contributed, rush your check now to D. Kern Holoman, Department of Music, University of California, Davis, CA 95616; if you have already given, consider giving again. There is no better professional cause.) Thursday evening will see a no-host cocktail party, and for the connoisseurs of arachnidae a Maryland crab-feast will follow in Lexington Market, a still functioning eighteenth-century indoor market. On Saturday evening the (new traditional) AMS Dance will take place. The orchestra will be the Capital Quicksteps & Quadrille Orchestra, which features contra dancing—yes, there will be a caller—as well as couple dancing, from Viennese waltzes and fox-trots to turn-of-the-century (20th, that is) arrangements unearthed in the Library of Congress.

Baltimore's Walters Art Gallery, with its superb collection of medieval and renaissance paintings and incunabula, will mount a special exhibition, "Making Music in Medieval Manuscripts." The Baltimore Museum of Art also extends a cordial invitation to our members to view its world-famous Cone Collection, which includes works of artists of Gertrude Stein's studio, Matisse, Picasso and others.

For those desiring more extensive outings, special bus tours are planned for Friday and Saturday afternoon. These will include museums, special architectural sights of Baltimore, including Fort McHenry which still flies a replica of the flag that Francis Scott Key saw, and the Inner Harbor.

The Omni Hotel will provide rooms for AMS/SMT members for $80, single or double; extra beds are available for $16. An Omni reservation card is enclosed. Please return this as soon as possible; the Omni may not be able to accommodate late registrations. For students concerned about hotel costs, we have made a special arrangement with the Holiday Inn—Inner Harbor; rates for students only are $56 single or double, with extra costs costing $10 per night. Call directly (301) 685-3000 to make a reservation at the Holiday Inn.

Sovereign Travel Agency has worked out special rates with Piedmont and United Air Lines of 5% under the discounted fare, or 40% under full-fare for those who cannot stay over Saturday night. Limousine service from Baltimore-Washington International Airport to the Omni is available. For those traveling in the Northeast Corridor, we have reserved a special Amtrak coach for AMS/SMT members on the Bankers, which leaves New York City at 9:35 A.M. on Thursday, November 3 and departs Baltimore Sunday, November 6 at 2:16 P.M. Willi Apel (1893—1988)

Willi Apel, Professor Emeritus of Music at Indiana University, died peacefully at his home in Bloomington late in the afternoon of 14 March 1988, half a year short of observing his ninety-fifth birthday. He had been at his desk earlier that morning, stubbornly holding to a lifelong habit of producing some bit of scholarly work every day. A sheet of paper partially rolled out of his well-worn manual typewriter had been nearly filled up with a translation into German of a Latin text sitting open to the side—mute testimony to the alert, inquisitive, and disciplined mind that for half a century sought out subjects of timely interest in musicology and satisfied many of them with scholarship of remarkable durability and influence.

Apel was appointed Professor of Music at Indiana University in 1950 and was named Professor Emeritus when he reached age seventy in 1963, although he continued teaching until 1970. Two years later, Indiana University celebrated his distinguished career as a scholar by naming him Doctor of Music honoris causa—a celebration enacted more than once elsewhere, most recently in 1982 by the University of Padua.

Apel Obituary

Born in Konitz, Germany (now Chojnica, Poland), Apel first studied mathematics at Bonn (1912) and Munich (1913-14), then at Berlin (1918-22). Already a pianist of some accomplishment—he had worked with Edwin Fischer, among other noted teachers—Apel developed an interest in musicology around 1925 and essentially taught himself. He took his doctorate at Berlin in 1936, defending a thesis on Accident und Tonalität in den Musikdenkmälern des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts. That same year, he fled his benighted homeland, arriving in this country among the first wave of German-speaking scholars who would alter the character and course of American musicology.

Settling in Boston, Apel soon found piecemeal employment as a lecturer at schools in the area, including Harvard University and Radcliffe College, the Longy School, and the Boston Center for Adult Education. One day, he went to hear Dom Anselm Hughes deliver a guest lecture at Harvard on liturgical music. Afterwards, the two of them discussed the possibility of compiling a dictionary of liturgical chant and approached Harvard University Press with the idea. The editor suggested instead a dictionary of music, which failed to interest Hughes, but Apel seized on the project and produced what became the first truly professional dictionary of music in English, the original Harvard Dictionary of Music (1944).

Apel’s dictionary made his name familiar to generations of American music students, performers and musicologists alike, and called it as well to the attention of Dean Wilfred Bain at Indiana University. When Bain learned to his surprise that Apel was not teaching at Harvard, a mistaken belief widely held at the time, he immediately offered him a continuing faculty appointment to begin in the fall of 1950. By then, the influence of Apel the generalist and teacher had already extended far beyond the environs of Boston, not only because of the Harvard Dictionary, but also because of his Notation of Polyphonic Music, 900-1600 (1942, rev. 1961) together with his and Archibald T. Davison’s Historical Anthology of Music (1946-50). The overwhelming majority of the current membership of the American Musicological Society know these three publications to be central and crucial components in their education as professionals.

The interests of Apel the specialist remained intertwined with those of Apel the generalist throughout his life, leading to a succession of major books and editions, among them: French Secular Music of the Late Fourteenth Century (1950); Gregorian chant (1958); Geschichte der Orgel- und Klaviermusik bis 1700 (1967), later revised and translated into English by his colleague at Indiana, Hans Tischler (1972); and ten volumes in the Corpus of Early Keyboard Music (1963-75), for which he also served as general editor.

A complete bibliography of Apel’s lifetime of published work, including book translations into other languages, would be impractical in such a context as this. Suffice it to say that in his ninetieth year an enduring scholarly vigor saw through publication Die Italienische Violinmusik im 17. Jahrhundert (1983), which had been conceived as one part of a planned exhaustive review of the entire body of early violin music not unlike his History of Keyboard Music to 1700. He had recently cooperated with Thomas Binkley, his colleague on the Indiana University faculty, in the latter’s revising and editing of Apel’s own English translation of the violin book, the publication of which is scheduled for spring of 1989. Binkley is also responsible for compiling Medieval Music (1986), a selection of Apel’s articles and reviews on the subject. His miscellaneous writings on the music of later periods have also been collected by Binkley for a second volume now being readied for publication.

Apel was a member of the AMS, the International Musicological Society, and a fellow of the Medieval Academy of America. He was elected an Honorary Member of the AMS in 1971.

A disciplined life dedicated to deeds makes of itself a worthy monument. So has Willi Apel made his life. The bright memory endures for those who knew him well—above all, his devoted wife Ursula Siemering Apel—and challenges us to imitation in the very sense Apel himself would have understood the word.

Catherine V. Brooks (1911-1987)

Many persons will be saddened to learn of the passing of Catherine V. Brooks, who died on 25 November 1987 at the age of seventy-six. Although deprived of a career in musicology by circumstances beyond her control, she was a vibrant figure in the musical life of New York during the 1940s, ’50s, and ’60s. As a staff member of the Music Division of the New York Public Library under the leadership of Carleton Sprague Smith, she helped countless hundreds who used the library’s facilities. She will be remembered with particular affection by several generations of New York University students, whom she shepherded through the initial rigors of graduate study under Gustave Reese and Curt Sachs. Endowed with seemingly boundless verve and good humor, she gave generously of her materials, expertise, and optimism to those in need of assistance or encouragement. Her dissertation on the chansons of Antoine Busnois is to have furnished the basis for a critical edition of that composer’s oeuvre; the latter, however, remained unfinished. She was of extraordinary assistance to Gustave Reese in the completion of Music in the Renaissance. As Reese himself acknowledged, “The section on English virginal music is more hers than mine. She has helped in the preparation of ‘copy,’ the reading of proof, the preparation of the index—in short, in practically every phase of work on the book. Her enthusiasm and drive have materially expedited its completion.”

A devoted daughter, Catherine Brooks Daniel, on more than one occasion put aside her personal and professional life in order to care for her parents, who were in poor health in their later years. She was much interested in young people and served as both teacher and librarian in northern New Jersey. As a veteran of the Women’s Army Air Corps, she was a captain of the Civil Air Patrol and leader of its cadet program. She retains a warm corner in the hearts of those whose lives she touched.

Ralph T. Daniel (1921–1985)

Ralph Daniel, Professor Emeritus of Music at Indiana University, died at his home in Bloomington on 27 January 1985 of complications related to emphysema, a disease that afflicted him for nearly a decade but never managed to quell his valiant spirit or dim his characteristic smile. During his last years, Ralph succeeded in carrying out a thorough revision of his article, “Western Music,” for the last edition of Encyclopaedia Britannica. His passing was keenly felt among close friends and colleagues in Bloomington.

Ralph retired from the active faculty in 1980, after thirty-one years at Indiana University. At the time of his retirement, he had served for nearly seventeen years as Chairman of Musicology and Director of Graduate Studies in Music. That period saw the School of Music blossom, its faculty and enrollment burgeon, and its graduate programs multiply and expand. His skilled leadership, diligence, and dedication during this period of unprecedented growth helped to forge and sustain the standards of scholarly excellence that secured for the School of Music the enviable reputation it enjoys today.

Ralph was born in Kerens, Texas, where he completed his secondary education and early training in music. Thereafter, he was educated at North Texas State University (B.M., M.M.) and Harvard University (M.A., Ph.D.), a period highlighted by marriage to Genevieve Barr in 1943 and including four years of service in the U.S. Army and a year on the faculty of North Texas State University.

During his long tenure as Director of Graduate Studies, Ralph oversaw the academic progress of each of the hundreds of students who pursued advanced degrees in the School of Music. If problems arose, he listened attentively, judged fairly, and acted firmly.

Most appreciated his attentiveness; some appreciated his firmness; all appreciated his fairness. He personally read through every one of the theses, dissertations, and doctoral documents certified by his office, noting on them, in his precisely formed script, language rigor, logic, or style, to say nothing of simple mistakes in grammar, syntax, and punctuation. In short, he left his mark—sometimes literally, sometimes figuratively—on virtually every graduate student who passed through the School of Music during those years.

Before his long stint in administration, Ralph had made his mark as a teacher of classes legendary for clarity in organization and presentation. The many students who marshalled the requisite discipline to pass his course in the recognition of musical styles found their habits of listening to music permanently altered. His legacy survives to the present in the form of an Examination in Style Description and Recognition that must be passed by all students graduated with doctoral degrees in music from Indiana University.

Along with his deep involvement in teaching and administration, Ralph stayed active in the IMS, AMS, and CMS, serving on the national councils of the latter two. His research interests and many of his publications focused on music in England and the United States, including, in addition to a number of articles and essays, The Anthem in New England Before 1800 (1966) and The Sources of English Church Music, 1549–1660 with Peter Le Huray (1972), research for the latter supported in part by a Guggenheim Fellowship during 1961–62. Ralph also collaborated with Willi Apel on the original Harvard Brief/Dictionary of Music (1960).

The memory of Ralph Daniel’s optimism in the face of adversity and his unwavering devotion to the highest ethical standards as he understood them in both his personal and professional life continue to haunt those who were witness to his example.

Francis Ll. Harrison (1905–1987)

Twenty-five years ago, having completed and defended my dissertation on medieval English polyphony, I sent Frank Harrison two excerpts, since just a few years earlier he had, with his book Music in Medieval Britain, established himself firmly as the singular and eminent authority in the field. He returned his comments with gratifying promptness, being quite complimentary about my systematic listing of sources and their contents. He was less charmed by the other excerpt, an unreasonably lengthy one of sixty-six typed pages, on two of which I argued that a disjunct (functional) bottom voice need not be an inevitable condition for a composition to give the impression of tonal cohesion. Quite incidentally and in a spirit of concealed (and ill-advised) musicological sportiveness I had included in the excerpt four fourteenth-century cantilenae, their tenors replaced by fundamental basses, to show—so I thought—that the compositions’ tonal effect was equally manifest, sicut iacebant or in their doctoredsate up. This seems to have caught Frank Harrison’s watchful eye instantly, and he restricted himself to the one comment that he could summon no sympathy for such Riemannesque anachronisms. Even so, he dropped a somewhat cryptic hint that the repertoire needed to be published in a performing edition and that I might have a hand in such an undertaking. I answered him after a respectably minimal interval; this time I received no reply. Only some months later there arrived a mouth-watering picture post card from the isle of Capri, the circumstances and contents of which struck me at the time as only minimally less cryptic. Ultimately, after this seemingly capricious beginning, many years of fruitful and stimulating collaboration ensued.

I relate these events in such detail only because they seem to me to reveal anecdotally the admirable qualities of Frank Harrison, a native of Dublin, where he spent the first thirty years of his life. His personality was made up equally of joie de vivre (he would surely not have wanted it called Lebensfreude) and intelligence. Even his scholarship manifested both of these aspects. Not only did his formidable intelligence inform his rigorous scholarship, which tolerated no sloppy thinking, but at the same time all his musicology—systematic, historical, ethnological and organological—gave constant evidence of his concern with music not so much as a collection of opera perfecta et absoluta, but as ingredient of living processes. Just as he enjoyed the vitality and ordered panoply of ceremonies—I have a vivid memory of watching him having a great time, resplendently gowned in his salmon robe, at the 1970 Encænia at Oxford University—so he painstakingly and with unprecedented fullness and exact-

News Briefs

Under the new editorship of Lorenzo Bianconi, Acta Musicologica has undergone substantial changes. The number of scholars on the editorial board and the term of service have been reduced. Present members from the United States are Reinhard Strohm (Yale University) and Bonnie Wade (University of California, Berkeley). Beginning with vol. 59, no. 1, each volume now consists of three issues. The first two include studies and contributions to musicological research. The third issue reports the activities of international, national and local musicological societies and research groups and also includes annotated bibliographies on various topics. Beginning with vol. 59, no. 2, each issue concludes with an "Agenda Musicologica," an informational bulletin open to contributions from all.

In September 1987, the University of Virginia was granted funding from the U.S. Department of Education to launch the US-RISM Libretto Project. Funding is for one year, and supports the hiring of three full-time staff members and connection to the RLIN database. The University of Virginia will catalog roughly 3,000 nineteenth-century Italian librettos from the Albert Schatz Collection at the Library of Congress. In order to ensure the quality of the cataloging, we invite the scholarly community to examine our records and to communicate comments, questions, and complaints to us. All RISM cataloging will be available through the RLIN database. Some eighty RISM records entered by other libraries will also be available. If you wish to consult this database, contact Marita McClymonds or Diane Parr Walker, RISM Libretto Project, Music Dept., 112 Old Cabell Hall, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, VA 22903-1298.

The Marr Sound Archives and the Conservatory Library of the University of Missouri-Kansas City recently received a gift of cylinder sound recordings and sheet music from Dr. James Hopkins, a plastic surgeon from Kansas City, MO. There are a large number of rare ragtime pieces as well as Kansas City and Missouri publications.

Harrison Obituary
Atitude in his archival and literature research revealed the complex ritual processes that music served in medieval Britain. By and large, he approached all music in a similarly comprehensive way. The same vital attitude to music also accounted for his insistence on clear, uncluttered performing editions of all music—and texts—in his charge. It was his commitment to the pleasurable and full-blooded adornments and joys of life—good wine and food, good humor (with a dash of playfulness), good conversation, good music, good scholarship, give-and-take in the classroom, travel with its experiential and scholarly dividends that made him so successful and entertaining a person.

If I call attention to his many and varied accomplishments described and listed in _The New Grove_, it is only to remind the reader of his range of interests, all of which he treated with characteristically firm control and the increasingly "anthropomusical" approach he brought to his work. The final "English" volume in the Osiris-Lyre series (_PMFC_) came out two years ago. It is gratifying that this undertaking, in which he had a major role, came to fruition well before his recent passing. Last year, at the—in his case—young age of eighty-two, he died, suddenly and without any prolonged suffering (as surely he would have wished), in Canterbury in _die Sancti Thomae_, the English saint most prominently dealt with in _Music in Medieval Britain._

When Walter Kaufmann died on 9 September 1984, the world of music lost one of its most distinguished citizens. Internationally known for his many outstanding contributions to music as conductor, composer, and scholar, Kaufmann was the epitome of the complete musician. A consummate artist, Kaufmann was renowned for the sensitivity and precision that he brought to his performances, whether it was as pianist or as conductor. Those same qualities characterized his creative work as composer and scholar. There was a wholeness to his work and vision, and it was that unity of purpose that explains, on the one hand, how he was able to balance those three careers and, on the other, how—in spite of the fact that he was so thoroughly rooted in the Western tradition he could turn with such ease to embrace the music of the East. For Kaufmann that shift required neither apology nor explanation: it was a logical consequence of his belief in the oneness of music and in its power to express what is best and noblest in man.

Kaufmann was born on 1 April 1907, in Karlsbad, Czechoslovakia and studied at the _Staatliche Hochschule für Musik_ in Berlin and the German University in Prague. His teachers included Franz Schreker, Curt Sachs, Georg Schuennemann, and Paul Nettl. While still a student, Kaufmann was appointed conductor at the Stadttheater in Karlsbad; thus began a career which he was to pursue for more than a quarter of a century.

In 1934 Kaufmann immigrated to India, where he became Director of Indian Music at All-India Radio in Bombay. In India his interest was soon drawn to the music of his new homeland, to which he devoted himself with great enthusiasm. After serving in the British Navy during World War II, Kaufmann left India to settle in England, where he conducted at the BBC. In the following year he moved to Canada, where, for eight years, he was Conductor and Musical Director of the Winnipeg Symphony. In 1957 Kaufmann joined the faculty at Indiana University as Professor of Musicology. He quickly established himself as a conductor, and earned an enviable reputation for the energy with which he devoted himself to his scholarly work. In 1981 Kaufmann was honored by his colleagues with a Festschrift, entitled _Music East and West._

Although the investigations that laid the foundation for Kaufmann's reputation as a scholar were carried out in India, it was not until he came to Indiana University that the full potential of his earlier work began to be realized. Here, between 1967 and 1981, he completed the many books that were to establish his international reputation as a scholar: _Musical Notations of the Orient, The Ragas of North India, Tibetan Buddhist Chant, Musical References in the Chinese Classics, The Ragas of South India, and the Volume, Alintien_, in the series _Musikgeschichte in Bildern._

While Kaufmann's careers as conductor and publishing scholar were largely successive rather than coexistent, his work as a composer spanned his entire lifetime. He was unusually prolific and wrote for virtually all standard media, enjoying his greatest successes, however, in his operas. Walter Kaufmann is survived by his wife Freda and his daughter Katherine.

Hans Moldenhauer (1906–1987)

Hans Moldenhauer died on 19 October 1987, at the age of eighty. Born in Mainz, Germany in 1906, he came to the United States in 1938 and eventually settled in Spokane, where he lived until his death. He chose Spokane in part because of his lifelong interest in mountain climbing. In his earlier years in this country, Moldenhauer was active as a pianist and piano teacher. He established the Spokane Conservatory in 1946 and published his doctoral thesis, _Die Pianistik_, in 1950.

Moldenhauer is best known for his work in connection with the life and music of Anton von Webern. In 1939 he began investigating the circumstances of Webern's until then mysterious death. The results appeared in _The Death of Anton Webern_ (1961). During this investigation, Moldenhauer acquired numerous Webern manuscripts, including many then unknown works. These now form part of the Moldenhauer Archives. In 1962 an International Webern Festival was held at the University of Washington, Seattle, where Moldenhauer was located at that time. The festival spawned the International Webern Society, with Moldenhauer as President, a position from which he retired with the honor of President Emeritus just months before his death. As President, Moldenhauer organized and produced five more festivals, each featuring performances of Webern's music, including first performances of many new works discovered in the manuscripts, exhibits of Webern manuscripts and memorabilia, and scholarly symposia. Other books and articles on Webern followed, culminating in the definitive biography, _Anton von Webern: Chronicle of His Life and Work_ (1979), written in collaboration with his late wife, Rosaleen, for which they received the Deems Taylor Award from ASCAP.

During his last days, Moldenhauer was active—as much as his debilitating illness allowed—in the placing of various collections of the Moldenhauer Archives in appropriate institutions and in compiling a Register of Names in the Moldenhauer Archives. The Moldenhauer Archives System comprises ten depositories in four countries: Austria, Germany, Switzerland, and the United States. The Webern Archive of the Moldenhauer Archives is now part of the Paul Sacher Foundation, Basel. A segment of the Webern Archive has been designated the Anton von Webern Rosaleen Moldenhauer Memorial Collection, a catalog of which is to appear in future issues of the _Newsletter of the International Webern Society_. A complete list of depositories is found in the Fall 1987 issue.

In 1984, Moldenhauer was named Honorary Curator of Twentieth-Century Music in the Harvard College Library. Other awards and recognitions he received include the Austrian Cross of Honor (First Class) for Science and Art, the Order of Merit (First Class) of the Federal Republic of West Germany, and the Golden Order of Merit of the City of Vienna.

Homer Ulrich (1906–1987)

Homer Ulrich, distinguished educator and writer, died on 28 November 1987. During his long and active career, he achieved a reputation as a musician of profound knowledge, great perception, and tireless energy. He began his professional career as a bassoonist in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra from 1929 to 1935. Between 1935 and 1938, he was the Director of the Music Department of Monticello College. In 1939, he graduated from the University of Chicago with a master’s thesis on “The Penitential Psalms of Lasso” and was appointed an associate professor at the University of Texas. In 1951 Ulrich became a full professor there. From 1953 until his retirement in 1972, he served as Chair of the Music Department of the University of Maryland at College Park.

As a writer, Homer Ulrich exhibited a prose style which was at once erudite and accessible. His books Chamber Music (1948 and 1966), Symphonic Music (1952), and A Survey of Choral Music (1973) have been used widely as texts in upper-level and graduate courses. A History of Music and Musical Style (with Paul A. Pisk, 1963) became an important text in the teaching of style discrimination, and Music: A Design for Listening, (1957, 1970) has continued to be one of the most widely adopted music appreciation textbooks of its time.

As an academician. Ulrich was both a brilliant teacher and a gifted administrator. His contributions in the latter capacity were particularly evident during his years at the University of Maryland at College Park. He arrived there at a time when the institution was prepared to accept his leadership in transforming a modest department into an important school of music. Ulrich’s vision was a moving force behind the assembling of an impressive faculty, the collecting of library holdings, the adding of professional degrees to the curriculum (both at the undergraduate and graduate levels), the planning and opening of a new facility, and the building of music-student enrollment to the level of several hundred majors, both undergraduate and graduate.

Homer Ulrich is regarded by members of the Maryland faculty as the “founding father” of the Department of Music and is honored by a series of annual performance awards named for him.

From 1970 until his death, Ulrich served as the review editor for the American Music Teacher, the official magazine of the Music Teachers National Association. In 1976 he wrote the definitive history of that organization, A Centennial History of the Music Teachers National Association.

He married Miriam North on 19 September 1934, and with her had three children, Karen Jones, David Ulrich, and Gretchen Buzzell. His memory and the benefits of his many good works will be felt for years to come.

Walter Woodfill was unusual among historians of his generation in taking music and musicians as a subject for research. He completed his Ph.D. at the University of California, Berkeley in 1940, having studied with George H. Guttridge in history and Glen Haydon in musicology. The book that came out of his research, Musicians in English Society from Elizabeth to Charles I, was published by Princeton University Press in 1953. It is a classic of its kind, remarkable not merely for its thoroughness but also for its selectiveness, and the passion with which it goes about uncovering the life and working conditions of the ordinary, not the great, musicians. Woodfill evidently conceived a dislike of the optimistic view of Elizabethan musical culture so heavily traded upon by post-World War II early music groups like the New York Pro Musica. The evidence he collected (or rather the lack of evidence he demonstrated) made it possible for him to put forward a view of Elizabethan music as a small and down-at-heel operation kept alive largely by the royal court. The force of his arguments was such that musicologists were obliged to abandon their idealized notions. Further support for his view came from Joseph Kerman’s study of the madrigal and James Osborn’s discovery of Thomas Wythorne’s biography.

There has since been some revision. A few more musical families have been discovered (like the junior branch of Norfolk Pastons and the Pagets, both Catholic). Further work with actual documents may reveal more—Woodfill worked largely with the calendars of manuscripts published by the British Historical Manuscripts Commission. More recently, scholars, possibly under the spell of Lawrence Stone, have been anxious to demonstrate a growth of musical literacy in the sixteenth century. Their efforts have been inferior, and the historical view of English musical society and culture will continue to be “Woodfill” (slightly modified) until some similarly sustained and rigorous work is produced.

Walter Woodfill taught at Princeton, Wesleyan, and the University of Delaware before returning to the University of California to teach at the Davis campus, where he served for sixteen years as Chair of the Department of History until his retirement in June 1978. He died on 10 December 1987 and is survived by his wife, Jacqueline Iselin, and their three children, Celia, John, and Thomas.
