ANAMASS supports legislation addressing the prevention of workplace violence. There are two separate bills addressing health care employers/facilities to develop plans to prevent workplace violence -. We have begun to look at the differences between these bills, primarily around who bears responsibility for workplace violence (employer or perpetrator), PTO vs. unpaid leave to seek victims’ services/legal assistance; otherwise the bills are very similar. ANAMASS compared each bill side by side to determine how best to recommend language which will move these bills forward. A joint bill was sponsored by the Joint Committee on Public Safety and Homeland Security; ANAMASS provided written testimony to the House Committee on Ways and means.

There have been multiple bills presented, which the HPC has done extensive comparisons of, in particular Victoria Grimes-Holsinger and Ekta Srinivasa, and written testimony in support of specific aspects of and lobbied for the inclusion of language related to psychological violence/bullying.

Proposed Efforts to include and/or create legislative and regulatory language which expands the definition of workplace violence to include psychological assaults such as bullying, acts of psychological aggression, lateral violence, racism, etc.
