Course Description

Expedient and accurate radiologic triage is paramount in formulating treatment plans in time-sensitive scenarios, whether a patient presenting with an acute abdomen, acute stroke or the deteriorating patient in the ICU. Treatment paradigms rely heavily if not exclusively on the radiologist's interpretation. Our distinguished faculty will provide a variety of didactic lectures and case-based presentations with disease-specific approach that includes musculoskeletal, GI/GU, chest, body, pediatrics, neuroradiology, and interventional.

From trauma to tumors, the program incorporates the full spectrum of imaging modalities with CT, MRI, ultrasound, plain film radiography, nuclear medicine and catheter angiography. Speakers will focus not only on the conventional radiographic findings and differentials for acute/critical pathology, but will discuss new and innovative imaging and treatment technology. Educational content is geared for both the seasoned radiologist and those in training. Self-assessment credits (SA-CME/SAM) will be provided pending ABR & AOBR approval.

Course Objectives

- Be able to promptly recognize the disease entities requiring immediate medical or surgical treatment (i.e. acute surgical abdomen, acute coronary syndrome)
- Be familiar with catheter-based treatment options as alternative to surgical treatment for vascular injury of extremities
- Understand anatomy and physiology unique to the pediatric population and the most appropriate imaging modality for these patients
- Be able to distinguish traumatic versus non-traumatic (abusive) injuries in the pediatric patient
- Understand pathophysiology of acute stroke and associated imaging findings
- Recognize imaging features distinguishing stroke from seizures and other stroke mimics
- Be familiar with and understand rationale for the different modalities used in identification of MSK injuries
- Be able to recognize acute bowel pathologies and when ultrasound is indicated in the acute setting
- Understand the medical-legal aspects of the consent process in the emergent setting
- Be familiar with imaging findings in the trauma patient that distinguishes between surgical and non-surgical management
