

Proposal to fund a Mentoring Workshop for Assistant Professors in Research-heavy University and College Positions in the U.S.

Proposal Steering Committee: Louise Antony, University of Massachusetts Amherst;
Ann Cudd, University of Kansas

I. Purpose: Addressing the “Philosophy Exception”

Philosophy as a discipline has a gender problem. Although data about the race and gender makeup of its membership is not routinely gathered by the American Philosophical Association, a recent reliable estimate of the professoriate in U.S. philosophy departments is that 21% are women.¹ In the top 20 departments, that number falls to 19%.² Related to this is the fact that women do not publish articles at high rates in the top journals of the field. A recent study of the top seven journals of the field counted only 12% of the authors as women. None of the editors of those journals is women, and only 17% of the advisory boards are women.^{3,4}

Philosophy is unusual among the humanities fields in its skewed gender ratio. English, History, Linguistics, and Foreign Languages and Literatures boast percentages of women nearly equal to or greater than percentages of men in their professor ranks. In this regard, Philosophy is like Economics, which is unusual among the social sciences for its severe gender imbalance. While the gender imbalance in the natural sciences and engineering has long been recognized, and serious funding is available to help address the problem at all stages of the pipeline, little effort or funding is aimed at the humanities or social sciences.

Recently, the Economics division of the National Science Foundation and the American Economic Association has taken note of the gender imbalance within the field of Economics, and, through the efforts of a small group of committed senior women scholars, has begun to make changes. Scholars in this group have designed a mentoring workshop for women assistant professors working in research-heavy positions, and are conducting a controlled experiment to compare professional progress among women who participate in the mentoring program with women who do not. Preliminary findings show significant improvements in publishing, publishing in top journals, and federal grant awards⁵ among women in the mentored group, compared with the controls. These results have been described as “staggering.”⁶

⁶ Claudia Goldin, in her oral discussion of the previously cited study at the 2010 Allied Social Science Association meetings.

The exceptional gender imbalance in Philosophy has recently come under scrutiny by researchers within and outside of the discipline.⁷ The situation is now referred to as the “philosophy exception” among some psychologists interested in the effects of implicit bias and stereotype threat on minority groups. Philosophy blogs such as “Pea Soup”, “Leiter Reports: A Philosophy Blog,” “X-Phi,” and “Feminist Philosophers” have entertained discussion threads about the problem. In August 2009 a group of women philosophers, led by Sally Haslanger, a philosopher at MIT who has documented the nature and extent of the philosophy exception, met to discuss the issue and related issues of women’s status and future in the profession. Out of this meeting several initiatives were proposed, including one to begin formal mentoring of young women philosophers to achieve greater success.

II. Plan of Action: Mentoring Junior Women in Philosophy

A. General Description and Timeline

As executors of the mentoring initiative proposed at the meeting described above, co-directors Professor Louise Antony of the University of Massachusetts Amherst and Professor Ann Cudd of the University of Kansas propose to hold a workshop modeled on the economists’ workshop for women assistant professors in Philosophy currently holding tenure-track positions at research universities or at colleges with high research expectations. Our longterm goal is to achieve a critical mass of women philosophers within the profession. In the shorter term we aim to assist the participants in these workshops to publish in top journals and to either achieve tenure in their current positions or to move into tenured positions in higher-ranked philosophy departments. We propose to hold the first workshop in early August of 2011 at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, where one of us is a tenured full professor. We have secured the support of several successful, high-status women philosophers whom we can count on to participate as mentors in the workshop. The workshop will not choose participants according to field within philosophy, but will aim to attract women with a broad range of subdisciplinary interests in philosophy. We do not have an ideological axe to grind. We simply want to solve the gender problem.

We intend to hold these workshops biannually if they prove to be successful. In order to evaluate and document the efficacy of the program, we will assess the success of workshop participants annually over a ten-year period by asking participants to submit annual updated CV’s at regular intervals after the workshop. We will then devise measures to test whether our goals have been achieved. We expect to look at the following indices: quantity of publications, rank of publication venue (journal or press, as appropriate), success at achieving tenure, and rank of tenuring department. If, as we expect, our program shows the same degree of success as the program for women in Economics, we expect to see evidence of this success by year four or five.

We are requesting grant funding to fund the travel, meals, and lodging of the mentors, all of whom will be APA members. The University of Kansas has agreed to support the participation of Co-Director Cudd. The Department of Philosophy at the

⁷ The situation has even received comment in the New York Times:
<http://ideas.blogs.nytimes.com/2009/10/02/a-dearth-of-women-philosophers/>

University of Massachusetts Amherst has agreed to fund a $500 honorarium for the keynote speaker for the workshop. We are hopeful that the University of Massachusetts Amherst will also agree to pay the cost of meeting space, and to pay for student assistants to help with clerical and logistical matters. Participants in the workshop (“mentees”) will be asked to seek funding from their home institutions to cover travel, lodging, and meals, as well as the participation. Mentors will not be paid beyond reimbursement of travel expenses. Co-director Antony will pay for her meals out of her personal research account.

B. Workshop Plan

The workshop will be conducted over a three-day period. Mentors and mentees will be housed together at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. (Mentors will be accommodated at the Campus Center Hotel. Mentees will have the option of accommodation at the Campus Center Hotel, or in dormitory housing.) Meals will be taken together at the Campus Center.

Applicants for the workshop will be required to submit an abstract of an article-length work-in-progress. Those who are selected to participate in the workshop will be assigned to mentoring groups based on their areas of specialization. Successful applicants will be required to submit a complete draft of the abstracted paper, which will be circulated to the mentor, and to the other participants in their mentoring group. (There will be strict deadlines for the submission of the complete draft. Anyone who fails to meet this deadline will be replaced by an alternate.)

The workshop program will consist of working sessions (with participants organized into pre-assigned mentoring groups), interspersed with plenary panel discussions on various aspects of professional development and work/life issues.

A mentoring group will consist of approximately six workshop participants and one mentor. Each participant will serve as a presenter in one workshop, and as a “lead critic” in another. Other members of the working group will have read each paper in advance. The lead critic will open the discussion with 10 minutes of commentary on the paper. The author of the paper will have 5 minutes to reply, and then the floor will be open for discussion. Mentors will serve as facilitators in the working session discussions, and will provide feedback in the session along with the other members of the working group. This structure mirrors that of paper sessions at most professional conferences in philosophy. Our aim is to provide each participant with the opportunity to engage both with a senior member of the profession and with a peer, and to be involved both as an author and as a commentator in a philosophical exchange.

Panel presentations will involve the senior women recruited as mentors, as well as appropriate representatives from agencies such as the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Association of American University Women, the Mellon Foundation, and the American Council of Learned Societies. We may also try to recruit editors from prestigious philosophy journals, writers of influential philosophy blogs, or other professional philosophers with relevant experience to share. We also note that both co-directors have served or are serving as editors of major philosophical journals (Nous and Hypatia).

SCHEDULE

DAY 1: Arrival, dinner together with keynote speaker. (This will be a prominent woman philosopher.)

DAY 2:

8:30 – 9:30: Working session (broken down by mentoring groups)
9:40 – 10:30: Presentation -- “Strategies for Efficient and Effective Teaching”
10:40 – 11:40: Working session
11:45 – 1: Lunch and Panel: “Work/Life Balance”
1:15 – 2:15: Working session
2:30 -- 3:30: Presentation – “Publishing”
3:45 – 4: Working session
4:10 – 5:30: Presentation – “Grants and Professional Visibility” (with Donna Ginther and NEH program director)
6:00 – 6:30: Wine and cheese, socializing, or free time
6:45: Dinner

DAY 3: 8:30 – 9:30: Working session
9:40 – 10:30: Presentation – “Getting Tenure”
10:40 – 11:40: Working session
11:45 – 12:20: Lunch
12:30 – 1:30: Working session
1:40 – 2: wrap-ups; development of plans for follow-up
2 – 3: Plenary session: reports from working groups on follow-up plans, general discussion and evaluation

C. Timeline

September – December 2010: Co-directors Antony and Cudd will issue invitations to potential mentors, to a selected person to present the keynote address, and to experts for panel discussions. Antony and Cudd will prepare materials for advertising, and draft announcement of program

January 2011: Antony and Cudd, with assistance of student assistant, will send out announcements of program and solicit applications. Application deadline will be March 1, 2011.

March 1 – April 1: Antony and Cudd will review applications and select 36 participants and 2 alternates. All applicants will be notified of results. Participants will be given until May 31 to submit complete drafts of their works-in-progress.

June 1 – July 15: Mentors will read mentees’ works-in-progress, as will all the members of each working group. (Antony and Cudd will stay in contact with participants to ensure that this duty is discharged.)

August, 2011: Workshop will be held on the campus of U Mass Amherst.

September, 2011: Antony and Cudd will solicit preliminary evaluations of Workshop experience from Workshop participants (mentors and mentees).

September 2012: Antony and Cudd will collect updated CV’s from all mentees participating in the 2011 Workshop.

III. Budget

The University of Kansas has already funded co-director Ann Cudd's travel to attend the American Economic Association/Committee on the Status of Women in the Economics Profession workshop in January 2010, and will fund the travel and expenses of Cudd to the Workshop and in-kind services of an outreach director for the preparation of a flyer and graphics for the workshop. The co-directors are donating their time and expertise to run the workshop. Antony is paying for her own meals during the Workshop. We are asking the mentors and panelists to donate their services and time for the three days of the workshop. The Philosophy Department at U Mass Amherst has committed $500 for an honorarium for the Workshop's Keynote Speaker.

We request $7,600 in funding from the APA for travel, lodging, and food for the mentors, panelists, and the Keynote Speaker. We estimate travel expenses at $500, and $450 for room and board for each mentor. We are seeking funding from other agencies to cover the costs of Workshop materials: 30 binders at $30/binder, containing all handouts from panel presentations, and all papers of the members of the working group for each individual mentee.

The attached table summarizes the expenses and funding sources.

V. Additional Funding and Financing Plans

We hope to secure enough funding from the APA and from our host institutions to cover the cost of running the program in the first year. (Pending the outcome of negotiations between Antony and U Mass Amherst, we may need to obtain additional funds to cover the cost of meeting rooms. Antony is investigating possible sources of funding or alternative meeting space in case they are needed.) In future years we will seek funding from our host institutions, as well as from other agencies, including the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Five College Consortium, the Mellon Foundation, and the American Association of University Women. We hope that the first workshop will establish a track record that we can use to leverage such funding.

VI. Advertising

We will advertise the workshop through the Proceedings and Addresses of the APA, through philosophy blogs, through Facebook (Women in Philosophy Task Force), and through the electronic listservs of the Society for Women in Philosophy and of the Feminist Association for Ethics and Social Thought (FEAST). We will also send letters to chairs of philosophy departments throughout the U.S. asking them to bring this to the attention of their untenured women professors. Interested parties will be referred to our Website (see below) for downloadable application forms and for more detailed information about the workshop and the Mentoring Program.

VII. We will construct a website for the Workshop on the University of Massachusetts – Amherst server and linked to the Philosophy Department website, and the personal websites of the co-Directors with application information.
