William Marine, MD

1999

William Marine, MD initially came to the University of Colorado in order to create and teach the Introduction to Clinical Medicine course. Soon after beginning his teaching career, Bill set high goals for the university's medical and health care training. He helped the School of Medicine create a masters program focused on community health, then tackled the challenge of creating the Preventive Medicine Residency in collaboration with the state's public health leadership.

Dr. Marine committed his career to understanding the issues affecting the health of individuals and communities. Bill passed on his understanding through education and training programs like the Preventive Medicine Residency.
