

F. Marian Bishop Educator Awardee

Margaret Ryan, MD, MPH

2019

Dr. Margaret Ryan is a physician specializing in occupational medicine and preventive medicine in San Diego, California. She completed her education at Johns Hopkins University (BA in Biomedical Engineering), George Washington University (MD), and the Uniformed Services University (MPH). She served in the US military for more than 25 years, retiring as a Navy Captain in 2011. While in the military, she led several large epidemiologic research projects focused on recruit health, deployment health, vaccine-preventable infectious disease, and reproductive health. She has authored or co-authored 140 contributions to the peer-reviewed literature. Dr. Ryan is currently the Medical Director of the Defense Health Agency Immunization Program, Pacific Region Office in San Diego. She is also an adjunct Professor at the University of California, San Diego School of Medicine, where she supports the preventive medicine residency and teaches occupational and environmental health to undergraduate students.

