The Faculty of Business & Economics

Housed in the state-of-the-art architecturally designed Sir Owen G Glenn Building, our top-ranked, triple-crown accredited University of Auckland Business School is seeking to recruit established and early career academics to join its world-class faculty. It is the largest business school in New Zealand and has an international reputation for academic excellence. The Business School comprises seven academic departments with a strong reputation across the Asia-Pacific region and beyond. We support exceptional, internationally recognised faculty characterised by their desire to make a difference to business in New Zealand, the global economy, and society more generally. The University has recently set a new strategic plan, Taumata Teitei, which can be interpreted from te reo Māori as pursuing excellence, despite uncertainty. It recognises the exciting challenges posed by the concerns of our age. Applications are encouraged from scholars committed to making an impact through research and teaching and with interests in any area of relevance to business.

Our Business School strives to influence policy development, research, and thought leadership in New Zealand business, focusing on our four strategic research and education themes – innovation and value creation, succeeding in international markets, productivity, sustainable business, and leadership and governance. We also have an ecosystem of well-supported Research centres across the disciplines. Your desire to identify and promote opportunities for industry engagement will further enhance the reputation, relevance, and influence of the Business School.

All academics within the Business School will be based in disciplinary areas that form part of larger academic departments; you will have the responsibility for delivering high-quality, relevant, and impactful learning experiences that maximise employment outcomes for graduates. Your understanding of academic and business environments and engagement in co-curricular activities relating to business will help deliver wider economic benefits. The disciplinary areas are intended to provide a supportive and collegial environment for all researchers and in particular, to ensure focused mentoring for early and mid-career researchers.

The School enjoys excellent international links and leading scholars from top overseas universities often visit the Business School and teach courses in our undergraduate and post graduate programmes.

Te Whiwhinga mahi | The opportunity
The Department of Property invites applications for a Lecturer, Senior Lecturer or Associate Professor in the Department of Property (Real Estate), a leading centre of property education and research in Australasia.

The Department offers a suite of Bachelor, Honours, Masters, and PhD programmes with lecturers who provide an holistic perspective on the discipline, enhanced by close links with the property industry. The BProp in particular, is highly regarded by industry and accredited by the Valuers Registration Board, the Property Institute of New Zealand, and the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors.

The Department of Property has a vibrant teaching, research, and postgraduate culture. It is known for excellence and innovation in research, learning, and partnership with enterprise. Our strong links with the property industry offer student mentoring experience and collaboration with key players in the property profession.

Academic staff within the department publish in top-ranked international journals across a wide range of areas, including property economics, housing, property finance and investment, disaster management, property management, property valuation (appraisal), behavioural real estate, and property education. Staff value their connection with the industry and are quoted frequently in the media.

Applications are welcomed from those with a minimum of a masters qualification in a recognised area of property (real estate); or cognate discipline and should be able to demonstrate the capacity to conduct high-quality teaching and research. If applicants do not have a doctoral qualification, the department would expect a commitment to completing a PhD part time while working.

This is a permanent full-time position.

Remuneration - $87,000 - $145,000 depending on experience.

He kōrero mōu | About you

Applications are welcomed from academics with a record of research and teaching in the areas of property valuation (appraisal), property finance or other property (real estate) disciplines. The successful candidate will be responsible for teaching in our property (real estate) programs at the undergraduate and postgraduate levels across our specialist areas.

The applicant must have a commitment to scholarly research and is expected, depending on the level of appointment, to develop an active research program leading to publications in internationally recognised academic journals or have an established international research profile. In addition, he or she will be expected to assist in developing the profile of the Department within the profession.

In addition, applications will be welcomed from candidates with appropriate, relevant industry experience in their field of expertise.

For Associate Professor, a substantial track record in the publication of research monographs and articles in leading international journals or similar is necessary. For these roles, it is desirable to have... experience in successful PhD supervision. Associate Professor applicants will also be expected to demonstrate an aptitude to undertake significant service roles commensurate with seniority.
