

How to Cite the Generally Accepted Recordkeeping Principles®

ARMA International's Generally Accepted Recordkeeping Principles® (Principles), Information Governance Maturity Model, and all related presentations, downloads, and materials pertaining to the Principles, are the sole property of ARMA International.

We encourage organizations, information professionals, consultants, journalists, and other individuals to reference the Principles and related materials. When using the Principles, please use proper notification of copyright and source:

- On first reference, spell out Generally Accepted Recordkeeping Principles® and include the appropriate registration mark, as shown. If additional references will be made, follow this first reference with the word Principles in parentheses: (Principles).
- On second and subsequent references, please refer to them as Principles, using an uppercase P.
- Please cite as: Generally Accepted Recordkeeping Principles®. © 2017 ARMA International, www.arma.org/principles.
- Please describe ARMA International in the following way:

ARMA International (www.arma.org) is a not-for-profit professional association and a global authority on governing information as a strategic asset. Formed in 1955, ARMA International's mission is to provide information professionals the resources, tools, and training they need to effectively manage information assets within an established information governance (IG) framework. The association created the Generally Accepted Recordkeeping Principles® and the Information Governance Maturity Model, and it publishes Information Management magazine.

To request more information, articles, or a presentation about the Principles and for other media relations issues, contact:

Tom Schad
Marketing, Communications, and Development Director
913.428.8919
Send e-mail