During the Conference, we’ll visit over 20 sites, including galleries, studios, museums, and community organizations, highlighting the cultural landscape in Montréal. Conference content will center around collaboration, cooperation, engagement and interpretation, building upon and continuing our ongoing focus of inclusion and access. Sessions will delve into the scholarly commitment to the investigation of race in art and visual culture within museums; ethical responsibility in collaborations with artists from outside the financial center-points of the art world; shift in art institutions and curatorial practice away from colonial legacies; collection sharing initiatives amongst organizations; Latinx identity and representation in our art organizations looked at through official and unofficial mentorship opportunities; and status of experience and relationships with digital. Keynote Dialogues, between leading voices in the field, will focus on cultural preservation, research, and artistic creation in developing inclusive and equitable exhibitions, collections, audiences, and networks.

Guests who are staying at Conference hotels will receive their Conference tote bag upon check in, and all other guests may pick up their tote bag at the first event that they attend. All guests will receive their nametag at the first event that they attend.

ARSENAL CONTEMPORARY ART / ARSENAL ART CONTEMPORAIN + DIVISION GALLERY Arsenal Contemporary is a privately owned cultural initiative with art spaces and collections based in Montreal (founded in 2011), Toronto (2013), and most recently, New York City (2017). Since its inception, Arsenal has dedicated its efforts to supporting, promoting, and developing contemporary arts and culture through a range of programming, including exhibitions, performances, events, and artists’ residencies.
Currently, Arsenal Contemporary is the largest private contemporary art center in Canada. Montreal director DOMINIQUE TOUTANT will lead a tour of Arsenal and of Galerie Division, the commercial gallery component of the space, whose stable includes several of Canada’s most noteworthy contemporary artists. The tours will be followed by lunch in the space.

BELGO BUILDING / ÉDIFICE BELGO
ANNE BERTRAND, Director of the Artist-Run Centres and Collectives Conference / La conférence des collectifs et des centres d’artistes autogérés will lead AAMC members on a tour of the Belgo Building in downtown Montréal. The privately owned, industrial era building became an important hub for the visual arts in Montréal because of the philanthropic low rent and the gravitational force of La Galerie René Blouin. Since then, the Belgo has continued to evolve with occupants from every known structure in the Canadian and Québécois contemporary art field including artist-run centers, photo collectives, private galleries, disciplinary service organizations, associations, artists’ studios, and a few rental galleries and pop-ups. Despite the many external forces that have threatened the arts community in the downtown core – the new economy of the 1990s and early 2000s with its startup boom and its subsequent bust, and other economic fluctuations, the Belgo has continued to renew itself and attract new arts audiences and spaces. The tour will include a brief visit of the following spaces: Galerie Trois Points, Galerie POPOP, Arprim, La Galerie Graff, Galerie Hugues Charbonneau, and Centre des arts actuels Skol.
DHC/ART FOUNDATION FOR CONTEMPORARY ART / DHC/ART FONDATION POUR L’ART CONTEMPORAIN

Celebrating its 10th anniversary in 2017, DHC/ART is a non-profit organization dedicated to the presentation of contemporary art for the Montreal public. The foundation offers two to three major exhibitions per year, a series of public events, special collaborative projects and an innovative education program – all offered free of charge as a way to make art accessible on a variety of levels while building audiences for the future. International in scope while responsive to the context of Montreal, DHC/ART’s programming has met with critical acclaim both at home and around the world. Its mission is to present impactful experiences that speak to the questions, concerns, and subjects that reflect and touch our everyday lives. Managing Director and Curator CHERYL SIM will offer a guided tour of a new solo show by Bharti Kher. This recent survey brings together a selection of her paintings, sculpture, and installation, that underscore a politicized sensuousness.

LA RUCHE D’ART ST-HENRI

The first art hive in Montreal, La Ruche d’Art, opened in the historic working-class neighborhood of St Henri in 2011. This community art studio welcomes everyone twice a week for self-directed art making and skill-sharing, in addition to several weekly closed studios for vulnerable groups (isolated seniors, people living with cancer, artists living on the streets). The art hive also serves as a Concordia University storefront classroom and Science Shop. La Ruche d’Art St-Henri hosts the Art Hives’ “Honey Pot,” a household creative reuse center that supplies free materials to the network. In the warmer months, creation extends to La Ruche’s garden, lovingly tended by staff and community members for the benefit of all.

Over the past five years, the staff has developed “curated spaces” in various academic buildings, public outdoor spaces, corridors, classrooms, and administrative spaces, where they enhance the teaching, research, and working environments of faculty, staff, students, and visitors. PREVENTING CULTURAL ISOLATIONISM “Globalism” has created a feeling of two-way access—artists in underexposed territories travel to participate internationally, and art professionals increasingly visit “lesser-known” territories.

Europe, North America, and Asia remain inarguably the financial center-points of the art world and are the continents where museum and gallery opportunities are more readily available to curators and artists. This maintains that “standards” for exhibiting artwork—including exhibition duration, presentation, artwork content, attention span and audience palatability—are defined by institutions in these continents.

In addition to obvious geographical and often infrastructural divides, there remains contextual divides between these continents and regions such as Central America, Latin America, Africa, the Caribbean and the Middle East. These divides impact modes of artwork production, thematics, moments of informality and formality in exhibiting, and how artworks translate to audiences.

This begs the questions, what responsibility does a curator have to showing work out of its originated context? How can a curator break down “standards” in order to support different ideas for exhibiting, and make the work accessible to audiences less familiar with the artist’s practice? What responsibility does the artist have in translating their work to various audiences?

CHALLENGING THE COLONIAL FOUNDATIONS OF THE 21ST CENTURY ART MUSEUM

The art museum is, inarguably, steeped in the legacies of colonialism. In order to take the actions necessary to invite diverse participation in the museum space we must effectively address these colonial histories. We must do so by eliminating the systemic barriers inherent to colonial structures, for if these obstacles are left unchallenged, diverse participation in the museum experience cannot be lasting. We must be committed to analyzing these legacies and taking action to dismantle them, and be open to establishing something new in their place.

Too often we find ourselves trying to attract more representative audiences without having the time, space, or support to think through how institutional structures and practices restrict our ability to make effective change. This panel will bring together individuals that have worked in a range of organizations, artists and communities, in order to enact their commitment to the work of moving art institutions and curatorial practice away from the colonial legacies in which they are rooted. We will explore what kinds of strategies are being used to inspire shifts in institutional structure and philosophy from within, and to diversify, complicate and deepen the relationships between institutions and communities.

Continuing the Conversation – Curators & Technologists United

The AAMC, together with our partners at the Roy Rosenzweig Center for History and New Media at George Mason University, and the Museum Computer Network (MCN), are exploring ways to increase collaboration among curators and digital staff. The group will discuss the benefits and challenges as art organizations integrate digital components across departments. To address the needs for professional development we will reference The Networked Curator workshop that provided digital advancement for art curators; to look at the future we’ll discuss what MCN and AAMC can do as organizations professionally supporting their respective members through a range of benefits. Along with the audience we hope to share and hear ideas and paths that will advance, support and facilitate more working relationships between curators and museum technologists.

10:00 AM – 11:10 AM
CRITICAL RACE ART HISTORY: READING, WRITING, TEACHING, AND CURATING
Jacqueline Francis and Camara Holloway have defined Critical Race Art History as a "scholarly commitment to the investigation of race in art and visual culture." How does such a commitment inform curatorial practices, and foster connections between universities and museums? This panel will explore how academic discourses on race, migration, and colonization have shaped collaborative initiatives in and out of the classroom. Professors who have curated exhibitions, curators who have taught courses, and artists who work across academic and curatorial boundaries will discuss the benefits and challenges of their interdisciplinary practices. What are some of the issues (administrative, collection-based, methodological) related to bringing such discourses into museum settings? Which strategies for collaboration across institutions are most effective, and which might need a different approach?

As part of examining the intersection of museum and academic work, this panel will address a recent initiative to create a series of bibliographies and reading groups that study race and ethnicity in art and visual culture. Developed by emerging scholars and the Association for Critical Race Art History, these reading groups have created new spaces for interdisciplinary learning by engaging curators, professors, and community members in four cities across the United States.

LATINX IDENTITY, MENTORSHIP & REPRESENTATION

The panel will address issues of Latinx identity while also discussing the challenges of audience engagement, diversification and interpretation through a conversation with panelists who have had a significant role in training or mentoring newer generations of Latinx museum professionals via official and unofficial mentorship models.

While cultural and arts organizations demonstrate an interest in discussing issues of equity and inclusion that go beyond conversations of outreach and staff diversity, leadership and curatorial positions and boards remain mostly white and male. Latinx professional inclusion and training often develops through intergenerational mentorship and unofficial alliances with junior and midlevel professionals of color training and mentoring underrepresented museum professionals without official recognition or compensation. Together, they find creative and sometimes subversive ways to implement horizontal models of collaboration within and outside of the museum and academia.

Using examples from our own experiences in constructing or altering existing programs or platforms within the institution as well as our work outside of institution—often on social media platforms and in alternative spaces, we hope to spark awareness amongst attendees on how they can push for improved mentorship and representation within their own organization and why it is crucial for the survival of museums.

NEW MODELS OF COLLECTION SHARING AND CURATORIAL CO-CREATION

A variety of art museum collection sharing initiatives have emerged over the last several years, raising the possibility of an increasingly networked, expansive approach to our shared commitment to access, interpretation, research and stewardship of the art in our care. For this discussion, the specific purposes and challenges of three different collection sharing programs will be considered: the Yale University Art Gallery Collection Sharing Initiative, which focuses on academic museum collaboration, Art Bridges, which focuses on American art and loans to regional museums, and the Kress Loan Network developed under the institutional auspices of the Georgia Museum of Art and focuses on European painting. Panelists will represent the points of view of lenders and borrowers of collection loans, and will explore the ways sharing initiatives not only broaden access to original works of art, but also foster co-creation of exhibition and teaching projects and ongoing cross-institutional collaboration. Highlighting opportunities and responsibilities that come with collection sharing, the panel will address both curatorial and broader institutional perspectives on the endeavor. We hope to share with the audience tangible take-aways on the various collection sharing programs’ parameters and networking opportunities to initiate new projects.
