 Publication Manager: Sarah Black

INTRODUCTION

The ASHI Quarterly is distributed electronically four times per year to the almost 1,500 members of the American Society for Histocompatibility and Immunogenetics (ASHI). The editorial content of the ASHI Quarterly includes information regarding Society activities and clinically relevant scientific articles of interest to the histocompatibility and immunogenetics community. Issues addressed include governmental regulations, summaries of the ASHI annual meeting and regional workshops, new product updates, and literature reviews. An ASHI Quarterly subscription is included as a benefit of membership for all ASHI members.

ASHI is dedicated to advancing the science and practice of immunogenetics and its impact on the quality of human life. Members of ASHI are immunologists, geneticists, molecular biologists, transplant physicians and surgeons, and pathologists and technologists involved in both basic research and clinical studies.

ASHI Quarterly advertisers manufacture and/or market products and services directly related to the practice and advancement of the science of histocompatibility and immunogenetics. Advertisers include marketers of HLA typing systems, DNA probe arrays, antibody kits, reagents, electrophoresis units, complements, and other laboratory research products.
