A VIEW FROM THE BOARD ROOM

Taking the Place of Mom and Dad

David Davis, DCUC Treasurer; President/CEO Pacific Marine CU, CA

Who taught you to balance your first checkbook? Where did you learn the basics of balancing “wants” and “needs?” Most likely, it was your mother or father who taught you about earning an allowance and saving to buy that new bike. Today, military credit unions are taking on that role and are assisting an entire generation of young adults — our junior military personnel.

Some recent reports say that 17% of military service members use payday lenders. These same reports suggest the leading reason for going to a payday lender is poor money management. Whether the need to visit a payday lender is for an emergency back home or unexpected car repairs, if our troops established a savings account, they would not be doing business with payday lenders. The sad truth is our troops do not save for the short term, and consequently, when an emergency arises, they resort to payday lenders. We need to step in; we need to provide our troops some “mom and dad” advice.

For many of our young recruits, the military is their first job. It marks the first time they have received a paycheck and the first time they have the freedom to spend their money — without mom and dad overseeing their decisions. It is the first time they are faced with a “wants” versus “needs” decision. Do they really need to purchase an extravagant stereo? Do they really need

CEO UPDATE

Make a Difference...

Roland A. “Arty” Arteaga, President/CEO, DCUC

Last month, our Chairman, Ralph Story (VyStar CU), addressed the Military Saves program, highlighting the kickoff campaign (February 25-March 4, 2007) and encouraging your support of this major initiative. This month, Dave Davis (Pacific Marine Credit Union), in his “View from the Board Room” gives some excellent advice and stresses the importance of savings. I would like to add my two cents and offer an open invitation...an invitation to get engaged, to get involved, and to promote the Military Saves campaign. The environment is ripe and the need for savings could not be greater.

Roland A. Arteaga

Why the campaign?
Awareness! Accountability!
Responsibility! Changing behavior...building wealth, not debt! What can you do to make that happen? Pledge your support to promote Military Saves!

So what is the issue? Regrettably, our troops are not saving...they are building debt! Why the campaign? Awareness! Accountability! Responsibility! Changing behavior...building wealth, not debt! What can you do to make that happen? Pledge your support to promote Military Saves!

In a few weeks, the Consumer Federation of America (CFA) will be completing a Military Saves’ participant’s guide with graphic elements, suggested activities, and additional information on the campaign. The guide will provide the how — how the DoD and the Military Departments will implement and/or support Military Saves — and the what — what you need to do to get involved. When the “kit” is done and the Department and CFA are ready to move forward, I’ll let you know. At this point, however, I am asking for your active commitment to this campaign and for your future support — and not just for 2007, but for every year thereafter!

I know (and the Department knows) you are already helping our troops and their families save. Whether in the form of savings products, such as share accounts, super share accounts, certificates, money market accounts, club accounts, and IRAs...or financials services, such as financial counseling, financial education, payday lending classes, debt management programs, savings seminars and basic financial management briefings, every day of the week you extend a helping hand to your members and encourage them to make sound financial decisions.

Savings is a lifetime event; Military Saves is an annual campaign that year after year (starting in 2007) will target some very special people...your members — our Soldiers, Marines, Sailors, Airmen, Coastguardsmen and their families. Without your commitment to promote and get involved in this top down, national effort our troops may not have the incentive to save and will continue to live in debt. Tall order? You bet, but I am confident, with your help, we can make a difference!

On a closing note, as you gather around the Thanksgiving table this year, please keep our service members and their loved ones in mind. Offer them thanks for all they do; pray for their safety and well-being throughout the year. Special thanks to you for your continued strong support of the Department of Defense and Defense Credit Union Council! Happy Thanksgiving!

Travis CU Sponsors Travis Air Force Base Deployment Program

Sherry Cordonnier, Travis CU

Travis CU participated in the Travis Air Force Base Kids Understanding Deployment Operations program recently. The program, called KUDOS, put over 500 children of Travis AFB Airmen through a mock deployment to understand what their parents go through when they are deployed and offered information to parents on how to access resources when the family faces a deployment.

The day's events included training in night-vision goggles, an aircraft tour, briefings from commanders, time in a medical tent, and a cultural display. The children were encouraged to dress in camouflage and were in-processed, visited a mock base set-up called Camp KUDOS, and received a welcome home ceremony.

Travis CU sponsored the event and staff members manned a booth in a C-5 Galaxy where children received goodie bags that included DVD's discussing how to deal with deployments, coloring books, and Travis CU harmonicas and Frisbees.

Navy Federal Honored with “Best in Industry” Minority Lending Award

Keasha Lee, Public Relations Specialist

The Lending Industry Diversity Conference, Inc. announced the Best in Industry Awards winners for 2006 based on the recently released 2005 Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) data. Navy Federal CU earned the Minority Lending Award for National Credit Union Association Reporters within the Regulatory Peer Group category.

The Lending Industry Diversity Conference, Inc. created the Best in Industry Awards to acknowledge those companies who have demonstrated superior performance in minority lending and minority market penetration and, by so doing, have shown themselves to be the best in the industry. The Minority Lending Awards by Regulatory Peer Group category recognizes mortgage lenders operating primarily in the continental USA that made the most loans to minorities within each regulatory peer group. The criteria for all of these awards is the number of originations that have no HMDA reportable spreads and where the lender has less than a 51% spread frequency (i.e., more likely to be a prime lender).

“We are delighted to receive this award,” said Barbara Sheehan, Assistant Vice President, Mortgage Products. “This honor recognizes our consistent efforts to meet the needs of all of our members by providing them with products and services to help them achieve their financial goals.”

The achievements of Navy Federal and other lenders will be recognized at the second annual “Best in Industry” Awards Dinner to be held in the Washington, D1C area in conjunction with the Second Annual Mortgage Lending Industry Diversity & Emerging Markets Conference and Career Fair. More than 3.8 million home loans were made to minorities in 2005 largely due to the success of this year’s minority lending award winners. VIEW FROM THE BOARD to have a cell phone with every imaginable “bell and whistle?” Can they survive with a less expensive device and possibly save the difference between a “first class” and a “coach” model? I submit they can...but they need someone to help them understand the difference and more importantly, understand the positive impact of their decision. They need someone to guide them through the first year or so and mentor them for a lifetime. Mom and dad can do that, but unfortunately, they are not always readily available...we are!

I remember being a young E-3, buying whatever groceries I could afford, and my wife and I living on the bare essentials until payday. Payday lenders weren’t readily accessible in the 1970’s, so when we ran short of cash, we simply had to make tough decisions about what we “needed” and what we “wanted.” Instant gratification was not in our vocabulary back then; money management was.

So what do we need to do to get back to the basics? To train our troops to make those tough decisions? To teach them about “wants and needs?” What do we need to do to reduce our troops’ dependence on payday lenders?

Aside from DoD’s professional financial counselors and us teaching the basics and providing advice (like mom and dad), I believe the military leaders need to encourage (and impose) good money management skills on our young service members. Recent legislation will certainly curb the payday lending appetite, but unless our troops are disciplined enough to make the right decisions (need versus wants) and do the right things (establish emergency savings accounts), they will invariably run short of cash at the end of the month. Who better than those who train and discipline our troops daily to oversee the financial morale and welfare of our troops, to reinforce responsible financial behavior to instill personal financial discipline, to encourage savings, and to direct our troops to trustworthy creditors.

This issue is about knowledge, discipline, and opportunity; it is about working together to make our troops financial savvy. It starts with the troops themselves, and involves the active participation of first line leaders, organizational leaders, on-base financial counselors, and us!

Two CUs Carve Out Their Niche Serving Military Personnel

*Sarah Snell Cooke, CU Times Senior Washington Reporter
Reprinted with permission from Credit Union Times.*

Credit unions came together last week to share their successes in serving the unique needs of the military during NCUA's Economic Empowerment Summit held Oct. 3.

NCUA Office of Small Credit Union Initiatives Director Tawana James explained that 17% of the military are actively engaged with predatory lenders, but she highlighted two credit unions chipping away at the market share. She explained that the military was a prime target for payday lenders because most are under 25 and financially inexperienced, lack a savings cushion in hard times, and are paid regularly with little likelihood of quitting or being downsized. "They didn't need the DoD report to tell them that," James said, referring to the recent Department of Defense report on predatory lenders taking advantage of military personnel, in introducing the two executives from the credit unions.

"The unique challenge Marine Federal Credit Union faces in 2006," Marine Federal Credit Union EVP Chuck Collins stated, "is how you deal with the deployment of about 40,000 members." The institution learned from a focus group of some expected issues concerning deployment, but they were also a bit surprised to learn that personnel ended up with too much cash on hand because of deployment pay and that having paper checks on hand can be helpful overseas when debit cards do not work properly.

The credit union also looked at its own call center issues; they were overwhelmed with wire transfer requests, fraud/transaction disputes, lost/malfunctioning debit cards, bill payer requests and identity theft issues.

Marine Federal wanted to be prepared when 25,000 more of its members are deployed again in February, Collins said. Meetings were held with base command to inform them of financial counseling available from the credit union where staff would show them how to set up bill pay and how to develop a budget. A better investment option was also made available to deployed members of the military for that extra cash with a higher yield and without withdrawal penalties.

"Management and staff know we can find a way to bend rules to make life easier" for the service members. Marine Federal has informed its collectors that if a member is confirmed deployed they are "hands off." If a car is being repossessed or had to be abandoned in a repair shop for deployment orders, the credit union will store it until the member comes back to avoid storage fees. The credit union linked up with CUNA's call center so it is available to service members 24/7 and has clocks in the call center offices showing the time in areas of major deployments.

Additionally, Marine Federal has a retired Marine on staff who goes around to the installations within the field of membership and discusses financial education topics like how to buy a car and debt management. He handles about 80 extreme cases one-on-one where the service member agrees to hand over their paycheck and receive an allowance while the counselor deals with the creditors.

Upon request from the wing commander at Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, where North Carolina Community Federal CU is located, CEO Robert McKenzie explained that his credit union looked at ways to work on issues specific to its military members. According to McKenzie, Bank of America—also on base, turned the request down.

What McKenzie's credit union came up with were loans to pay off the payday loans of military personnel. Despite North Carolina law prohibiting the product, it has been circumvented via the Internet and other methods. "I'd like to tell you this law totally eliminated predatory lending...but that is not the case," he said.

The credit union has partnered with the base to offer financial education in addition to these loans to help the servicemembers gain their financial footing. "What's most pleasing about this program is we approve about 90% of applications we get each month," McKenzie said.

North Carolina Community advertised the service in the on-base newspaper and handed out brochures. The first sergeants actually will sit in on the loan application process.

Collins' credit union is also training the next generation of the military offering a financial literacy boot camp for teens who are dependents of Marine families. "We started it about two years ago, and it's been just dynamite for us." The program, with interactive car and insurance buying games, has proven so successful an adult version was developed.

The Armed Forces Financial Network

2006 AFFN Military Community Support Program – A Major Success!

The Armed Forces Financial Network (AFFN), in partnership with Defense Credit Union Council (DCUC) credit unions, have for the third consecutive year, provided support directly to the troops and their families, through the AFFN Matching Grant Program. The AFFN Matching Grant Program is a part of AFFN's overall military community support commitment launched three years ago.

Over the past three years, over 69 grants have been issued directly to 'Military focused' organizations supporting our military, defense, and civilian communities worldwide. It is through their generosity that troops and their families are receiving direct benefit during such a critical time in our nation's military history.

In addition, the AFFN Corporate Donation component will once again this year focus on the military families staying in Fisher Houses during the 2006 Holiday Season. Last year, $18,600.00 in DeCA Certifichcks were given to military families staying at Fisher Houses throughout the United States and Germany.

This year, the contribution has nearly doubled, to $31,300.00 in DeCA Certifichcks! AFFN/AMBA Banks and AFFN/DCUC Credit Unions will present the DeCA Certifichcks to Fisher House Managers and military families during the upcoming 2007 Holiday Season.

During the spring season, several members of Tower's staff and their families showed their support of a Race to Cure ALS event by choosing to run a 5-kilometer race or take a 1-mile walk in honor of a former long-time Tower employee who lost his wife to the disease Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

The weather for the day of the race was warm and sunny, which contributed to a sizeable turnout. The 65 runners and 138 walkers who participated in the event raised $11,000, with Tower's contribution estimated to be 10 to 15 percent of the total amount collected.

Congresswoman Corrine Brown and her community partners launched the first computer giveaway to students participating in the Community Book Club Reading Initiative that began during the summer of 2006. To become eligible to receive a computer, participating students had to achieve the special initiative goals which were to read at least 25 books and submit a book report for each book read.

Ralph R. Story, Secretary of the VyStar CU Board of Directors, represented VyStar CU along with West at a special event on October 17 to distribute computers to the first 100 students. In addition to students, parents and teachers, the community leaders in attendance included Congresswoman Corrine Brown, Florida State Senator Anthony C. "Tony" Hill, Sr., Florida State Representative Audrey Gibson, Edward Waters College President Oswald P. Bronson, Sr., Ph.D., and several Duval County school teachers.

"VyStar CU is proud to be a part of this community and we are proud to participate in such a worthwhile initiative as Congresswoman Corrine Brown's Community Book Club. We are glad to be able to donate our refurbished computers to promote reading and help create better lives for children in our community," Terry West stated.
