Invite Your Facilities Manager to EBA in Providence, Rhode Island

The banking industry has seen a huge shift in its footprint, becoming a constant presence on your phone or laptop and taking advantage of co-location opportunities to serve customers while they shop or dine. This shift has changed the way that real estate is managed by banks and presents new challenges in divesting real estate. Many bank environmental risk departments interface with their facilities department when choosing new bank branches or divesting real estate assets, but we also want to encourage direct participation by facility managers among our membership.

For the first time, our conference in June includes programming specifically for facility managers in the financial services industry. We are examining issues that cross over between real estate lending and bank operations, and we have one session dedicated specifically to facilities management.

- Learn how urban redevelopment is affecting real estate trends, including divestiture of excess bank property.
- Explore some of the community issues that drive decisions on how to locate new facilities, whether they are data and back office operations or retail branches
- Understand the regulations and risk management strategies for hazardous materials in building materials
- Review information management strategies implemented by financial institutions for facilities and employee health and safety

EBA members and guests are convening in Providence, RI, June 4 - 7, 2017 for three and a half days of informative presentations and networking. The EBA, established in 1994, is a non-profit trade association, which addresses environmental risk management and due diligence policies and procedures in financial institutions. Providence is the ideal meeting location, cited as one of the "top 52 places to visit in the world" by the New York Times, and ranked #3 as "America's Favorite Cities" by Travel + Leisure.
