Program Description

The NC health care environment is undergoing rapid change with consequences for the people and providers in the Sandhills region which already experiences significant disparities in health and well-being. Moral distress resulting from systemic and ethical dilemmas in the changing health landscape is a driver of provider burnout. The William C. Friday Fellows program of Wildacres Leadership Initiative provides a model for dialogue education that fosters communication, reflection, and community in the learning environment as well as the relational skills necessary for leadership and well-being in complex systems. This monthly series will implement a dialogue education model to examine and advance leadership approaches to transforming the system of care.

Objectives

At the conclusion of this program, participants should be able to:

- Create an interprofessional dialog education forum that supports articulating and exploring community health as well as systemic and structural barriers to care.
- Model and co-lead a variety of civil discourse techniques across difference and disagreement.
- Examine the implications for Sandhills communities of the changing health care delivery and payment system.
- Describe and discuss care-based ethics that engage providers and community in relationship and engender trust as well as the moral dilemmas and ethical challenges that contribute to burnout and disconnection.
