Introduction

IAYT supports research and education in yoga and serves as a professional organization for yoga teachers and yoga therapists worldwide. Yoga therapy is defined as the professional application of the principles and practices of yoga to promote health and well-being within a therapeutic relationship that includes personalized assessment, goal setting, lifestyle management, and yoga practices for individuals or small groups.

IAYT is a 510(c)3 nonprofit organization. We strive to be a global leader in yoga therapy and work cooperatively with other yoga therapy organizations such as the World Health Organization and the Global Consortium for Yoga Therapy and U.S. organizations such as the Academic Consortium for Integrative Medicine and Health, the Academy of Integrative Health and Medicine, and Integrative Medicine for the Underserved.

The National Council of Nonprofits defines strategic planning as a process that allows the nonprofit to define the strategies that will “advance its mission.” Through their participation, the IAYT board of directors, executive director, staff, and contractors are charting a path toward establishing yoga therapy as a healing discipline.

This plan provides a summary of the background of IAYT, an analysis of strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats (SWOT) to the profession, and identifies priorities, goals, and objectives that are important for the organization to accomplish in order to continue movement toward more firmly establishing the field of yoga therapy. The strategy for 2021–2024 identifies priorities and actions required to accomplish each goal and respective objectives.

This strategic plan describes how IAYT is actively involved in shaping the future of yoga therapy. The plan broadly describes the leadership vision and direction for the staff and contractors. The staff and contractors, in turn, use this guidance to create implementation strategies to achieve the goals, moving the mission and vision toward reality.

The focus of this strategic plan is commitment. From the IAYT board of directors to the staff and contractors, the aim includes helping members envision their participation in the organizational culture. This means identifying different perspectives and values across the organization so that change can be made relevant for each person and knowing that lasting change must activate different parts of the organization in different ways. The quick and easy way is not necessarily the most effective path toward establishing the yoga therapy profession.

STRATEGIC PLAN 2021–2024

Introduction
IAYT is attracting engagement and interest on a global level. The practice of yoga therapy has been indelibly impacted by the new normal resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic. With these circumstances come pros and cons for new personal and professional paradigms for us all. This strategic plan is a compass that guides IAYT activities and identifies future goals. It is a guide that includes many projects and programs working together to serve the needs of IAYT. It addresses the mission, speaks to the benefits of membership, and identifies priorities.

Background
Founded in 1989, IAYT champions yoga as a healing art and science. IAYT supports research and education in yoga and serves as a professional organization for yoga teachers and yoga therapists worldwide. This strategic plan is designed to ensure that IAYT is well-prepared for the future.

IAYT understands that in today’s global environment, yoga therapy practitioners, accredited programs, and educational providers need to make judicious business and strategic decisions about their own operations, and that these groups require partnerships and support to achieve success in this emerging field.

IAYT is uniquely positioned to bridge global relationships that forward the field of yoga therapy and currently provides the following benefits to its members:

- Publications
  - International Journal of Yoga Therapy, peer-reviewed and indexed on MEDLINE/PubMed, with electronic publication of articles as they are accepted and processed
  - Yoga Therapy Today, high-quality digital and hard-copy professional practices magazine published three times a year

- Conferences
  - Symposium on Yoga Therapy and Research, an annual practitioners’ conference
  - Symposium on Yoga Research, an annual scientific research conference

- Standards
  - Educational standards and competencies for yoga therapy training programs
  - Accreditation for yoga therapy training programs
  - Certification for individual yoga therapists who meet IAYT criteria (C-IAYT)
  - Scope of Practice for yoga therapists
  - Code of Ethics for yoga therapists

- Digital platforms to educate and share sound practices for yoga therapy with peers, healthcare providers, and the public
  - iayt.org
  - yogatherapy.health
  - Robust social-media presence across multiple platforms

- Member resources that create value and support the profession of yoga therapy
- Favorable access to liability insurance for C-IAYTs (currently U.S.- and Canada-based practitioners only)
- Customizable marketing collateral and accurate, appropriate materials to educate clients and other stakeholders about yoga therapy
- Annual Meeting of Schools to discuss salient issues for the Member Schools community

- Organized professional voice for yoga therapy in both public policy and professional forums for integrative, complementary, and alternative healthcare

Current State of Yoga Therapy

- Yoga’s popularity is rapidly growing in many countries. According to a Yoga Alliance survey, the number of practitioners in the United States almost doubled between 2013 and 2016, from 20 million to 37 million. These practitioners spend $16 billion annually on yoga classes, clothes, and accessories. With 15% of the population currently or previously practicing yoga, the rapid increase in IAYT membership and certified yoga therapists parallels this growth.

  Local and federal governments are slowly being pressured—by budgetary considerations, policy, and public awareness, if not by legislative mandate—to support evidence-informed complementary practices. Especially of interest are practices, like yoga therapy, that promote individual agency, can be delivered simply, safely, and cost-effectively, and address chronic conditions (including pain and the resulting opioid crisis that affects communities across the United States and increasingly worldwide). There is a recognized need to vet the training and competence of those offering such complementary and integrative care, and particularly to distinguish the professional provision of yoga therapy from general yoga instruction as well as popular-media portrayals of yoga.

- Many countries are seeing serious growth in spending on complementary health approaches. For example, from 2012 to 2017, the use of yoga and meditation increased for adults aged 18 and over in the United States. Yoga, as a complementary health approach, increased from 9.5% in 2012 to 14.3% in 2017 (2018 National Health Statistics Reports).

- C-IAYTs know that yoga’s popularity is increasing. But this growth doesn’t automatically increase the demand for yoga therapy. C-IAYTs see the need to help the public understand the health benefits of yoga therapy and the advantage of including it as a key part of complementary/integrative healthcare services.

  Institutional members—Member Schools that do and do not have accredited programs, partner organizations, and sponsors—likewise understand the imperative for the public to recognize the educational preparation of a C-IAYT who has completed a rigorous training program in contrast to that of a yoga teacher with little or no training in yoga therapy.

- Several competitive forces are also taking advantage of this growing field. Other yoga organizations are making changes to embrace the growing yoga therapy field and may try to provide competitive and/or complementary certifications. Globally, Australia and the United Kingdom have developed standards, and efforts may be underway in India and Japan.
Licensed healthcare providers are keen to develop programs that integrate yoga into their practices. The health and wellness community also integrates components of yoga therapy such as personalized assessment, goal setting, and lifestyle management.

Near-Term and Mid-Range Goals

Our 2021–2024 strategic goals establish the environment in which to execute a multi-year, comprehensive roadmap. This out-year planning provides an opportunity to consider how to advance IAYT goals and assists in allocating resources required to make the vision a reality. In the near term, this planning enables IAYT to achieve quick wins on recognized “must-do” actions. Quick wins build momentum and organizational confidence to tackle the longer term and more difficult changes required to establish yoga as a recognized therapy. Departments use this strategic plan to understand the relevant issues and to determine specific activities required to implement the strategy and identify resources needed to meet goals.
