

Shannon Angielski
Executive Director, Coal Utilization Research Council (CURC)
Principal, Governmental Issues, Van Ness Feldman

Shannon Angielski provides clients with a wide range of regulatory and policy advice on energy and environmental policy issues and advises clients on the development of energy and environmental technology projects. Through her representations, Shannon engages Congress, the presidential administration, state and local agencies, industry partners, coalitions, trade associations, and non-governmental entities in crafting creative solutions and promoting federal policies and initiatives on behalf of her clients.

As the coordinator of the firm's Federal Funding practice, Shannon has substantial experience in the design and advocacy of federal funding programs before both Congress and the federal agencies, helps clients secure grant funding as well as other types of federal support and assistance, advises clients in applying for federal grant and tax funding opportunities, and oversees the negotiation and implementation of funding instruments with federal agencies.

As Executive Director of the Coal Utilization Research Council (CURC), Shannon develops and supports coalition initiatives and designs legislative proposals for clean energy and climate change policies and programs that support continued coal use. Through this representation, Shannon has significant experience in developing policies to support the development and deployment of carbon capture and storage technologies.
