

THINKING OF HAVING A BABY?

Fertility services are ready to help answer your questions

During the COVID-19 pandemic, it's only normal that you have questions and concerns about fertility care and whether now is the right time to have a baby.

Your healthcare team can advise you and help you establish a plan, should you wish to pursue your family dreams at this time. Reach out for medical and emotional support.

STAY ALERT

Limit your interactions with other people and take precautions against COVID-19. Follow local and national advice, and request assistance if you develop symptoms like fever, cough or difficulty breathing

SEEK ADVICE

Consult your healthcare provider to discuss fertility diagnostic tests and treatment options that fit your individual needs

STAY SAFE

Check that your healthcare provider has safety measures in place to protect you from COVID-19

COVID-19 during pregnancy

Most women who become pregnant can expect a safe, successful outcome. The COVID-19 pandemic may pose unique and unpredictable challenges for women who become infected during pregnancy, and your healthcare provider is best positioned to advise.

Questions to ask during your consultation:

- Is now the right time for me to consider pregnancy?
- What are the specific pregnancy-related health risks?
- Are there any risks posed to pregnant women with COVID-19?
- What is known about potential risks to my baby if I become infected?
