Man Up: Read Up!

Program Description: Man Up: Read Up! is a two-session experience for young African-American fathers and their children. By setting a learning context through using library resources and modeling, young fathers connect with their children by making/sharing books and creating their own stories to share with each other and their peers. Fathers and children are encouraged to bond and share experiences with each other by eating a meal together and a storytime. The majority of the time, fathers engage with a guest speaker, who offers anecdotal advice and experiences about fatherhood and reading.

The experience includes the Leading Edge Librarian offering support by modeling and sharing tips to enhance story times with their children; fathers are also encouraged to become comfortable with the Library and its resources by introducing them to Library materials and resources. Fathers were encouraged to participate in storytimes at the library. This encourages fathers to become familiar with the library in a safe, non-threatening environment.

The experience concludes with an opportunity for the children and their dads to pick out two books to take home to start their own storytime collection. In order to reinforce better reading skills for both parent and child, one child's name was drawn to win a Leap Frog Max. Through the use of the Leap Frog Max the children and fathers can develop proficiency with the real world application of their knowledge products.

Program Benefits: This program enables learners to make an emotional connection with their children through the act of reading. Fathers who have poor reading skills are able to improve their proficiency with easy reading books, if necessary. Studies show that the earlier children are exposed to books and new vocabulary, the better success they will have in school. Children, boys especially, who see their fathers engaged in reading will be come readers themselves well into adolescence and adulthood. Young fathers with reading difficulties will be able to see improvement in their reading skill and comprehension; as well as acquiring more confidence.

Past participants have valued the program because it facilitated their own discovery of creative and inexpensive ways to spend quality time with their toddlers and establish positive reading habits that will remain for generations to come.

Directions for Session 1:

If you are scheduling more than one session, try to make sure the sessions are spaced four weeks apart, if possible. If you try to schedule the sessions weekly, it will drain you and you won't have maximum participants for your program.

Make sure you begin early enough to find funding for this program, if necessary. We had to get a grant and were very close to the deadline, which was extremely stressful.

Publicity is key! Begin as soon as you know the date and time for your program. Make eye-catching posters and flyers to promote your program. I tried to have posters and flyers one to two months before the program so my patrons could keep the dates in mind. Pitfall: Remember your target audience when giving your program a name. I had to rename my program from 'My Buddy and Me and a Book Makes Three' to 'Man Up: Read Up!' because it didn’t appeal to my demographic.

Try to secure a popular or well-known guest speaker to talk to your dads. Preferably, someone they can identify and connect with. One example might be a radio personality who is a father and therefore has first-hand knowledge. Meet with this person, if possible, so you both know what’s expected.

If possible, please provide your participants with a meal. I was able to secure donations from a local establishment; they provided a full meal with desert. It makes the participants and kids more comfortable, especially if it’s their first time meeting and the first time at your library.

As soon as you know the date, please book your community room or other space. Pitfall: Be careful not to overlap your program with another one.

Please make sure you have plenty of help with the children during the storytime and craft portion of the program. Volunteers/helpers should meet ahead of time so that your instructions and expectations can be clear.

One to two months before the program, shop for all the materials, prizes, and books you will need.

Two weeks before program: Inventory all the items you are going to need to run the program such as plates, napkins, spoons, forks, etc. (if there will be food), prizes for participants, craft materials such as glitter, glue, white paper, construction paper, etc.

One day before the program: Call and remind the participants about the program. Have a volunteer or staff member take pictures, if possible. Have another staff member or volunteer responsible for any surveys or feedback from the program.
4.4

Menu: Session I:

Barbeque chicken
Mashed potatoes
Whole kernel corn
Tossed salad with dressings
Rolls
Dessert.
Menu: Session 2:

Selection of deli meats
Breads
Cheese
Lettuce
Tomato
Cookies and brownies
Storytimes:

For the first session, read, What Dads Can’t Do (Wood), or choose another book. Try to create an atmosphere for the kids and dads that is fun, yet send a powerful message.

For the second session, read Just the Two of Us (Smith). This book is useful in demonstrating reading techniques to the dads. Have a child to volunteer and read the story incorrectly to her (reading it upside down) to see if she notices. Both children and dads will love this.

Pitfall: Plan to have different levels of books available to read to engage a broad age audience. I had preschoolers as well as school aged kids at the first session.
Materials for craft:

Have the children and dads make a You and Me Book. On one page, have the child write or draw something about themselves such as: “I have brown eyes”; on the opposite page, have dad write and/or draw a response, such as “I have gray eyes.” The following can be used to make the books:

- Various colors of construction paper. I tried to remain with primary colors and stay away from gender-specific colors such as pink and blue.
- Unlined white copy paper
- Ribbon
- Glue
- Glitter
- Three hole punch
- Crayons
- Markers
- Ellison machine cut-outs of various shapes and pictures

The books can be made beforehand so the children and dads will only have to decorate and fill in the pages.

Pitfall: This craft can be messy with glue, so make sure the area is covered and there is plenty of water. Make sure you have enough glitter, kids really LOVE glitter! Also, if you have younger children, make sure there are plenty of hands to help!
4.7 Instructional Guide

Guest Speaker Expectations and Guidelines

If you plan on having a guest speaker, it is imperative that you are familiar with the speaker before inviting them to speak. Make sure that you give the speaker an outline of your program and let him know what you are looking for.

- Ensure the guest speaker is somewhat knowledgeable about your program and subject matter.
- Meet with the speaker personally, if possible so you can develop a rapport before the program. Try to do this two months or more before your program in case the relationship doesn’t work out.
- After you’ve met with the speaker in person, send him something in writing to follow up (email or formal letter).
- Select a speaker that will relate to your target audience.
- Have a back-up speaker in mind and ready to go in case something happens to your first speaker.
- Two weeks before the program, give the speaker a reminder phone call or email.
- Find out if the speaker has any special needs such as water, mints, or special equipment.

3. What do you think of the library and its services?

Practices:

1. Do you have a current reading ritual with your child?
2. What are your reading habits?
3. Do you currently use the library or its services?

States of Being:

1. How do you feel about books and reading?
2. Do you feel confident reading aloud to your child?
3. Do you feel comfortable using the library?
Post-Test Questions:

Concepts:

1. Name three things you got from this program
2. Has your thoughts about reading to your child changed or stayed the same?
3. Has your thoughts about the library changed since the program?

Practices:

1. If you didn’t read with your child before, do you currently read to your child?
2. Has your reading habits changed?
3. Do you and your child participate in any of the Library’s programs?
4. Why is it important for your children to begin reading?

States of Being:

1. Do you feel differently now about books and reading than you did before the program?
2. Do you feel more confident, less confident, or the same about reading aloud since the program?
3. Do you feel more comfortable or less comfortable using the library?
4. Do you feel more confident selecting books for your child?

Librarian’s role in the program:

Information Specialist - The absence of basic reading skills in a lot of young, black male patrons can be observed through a lack of communication skills and a lack of understanding instructions and concepts. Therefore, a reading program can be beneficial. There is also an abundance of female-headed homes in the area; fathers were absent at best, and at worst, disconnected. If somehow fathers and children (especially boys) could be connected, both deficiencies could be corrected. Other cities comparable to Indiana were contacted to see if there was another program similar; after many phone calls, a program was found in Minnesota. After speaking with the Program Administrator, it was determined that a project similar to that one would be beneficial at Brightwood. After finding similar programs, a number of books on literacy and storytimes, such as “Connecting Boys with Books”, “Reading Magic” (Fox), and ALA publications such as “Storytimes at Your Library” were found and researched. Online sources were used to confirm the theory of the importance of black fathers in the home. This research is valuable to acquire tools and statistics to help the dads as well as to connect more personally with the subject matter. Expect to have two or more work days during off-desk time to read and make notes on the various resources; also discard things that weren’t helpful or beneficial to the subject.

Instructor in Information Literacy/Inquiry Skills - Librarians have first-hand knowledge of the importance of Information Literacy and skill building with patrons. Partners had other skills that enhanced the program, but none had the knowledge expertise of selecting books for various kinds of readers or planning a storytime and craft. Again, research is needed to select books that will appeal to a variety of readers and reading skills. Other information professionals as well as professional literature from the ALA and YALSA are critical for research and ideas for book selection. Make sure that you can relate the material in a way that is easy to handle by all levels of participants. Have enough knowledge and material in case questions are asked by children and/or dads. Hours spent on this were approximately 6-8; yours may be more or less depending on your expertise in the subject matter.

Program Advocate and Administrator- As a program advocate, you will need posters and flyers to display in the Branch as well as eye-catching displays. Staff members are critical in helping to reach to the targeted demographic. They can help advertise the program as well. Once posters and flyers are created, distribute them to other branches. Give materials to partners to display at their institutions. As program administrator, you may have to design the program, select the number of participants to accept for the program, the guest speakers, the budget, and materials needed to complete the program. This by far can be the most time consuming of all the roles you’ll play. This took approximately 1-2 weeks (spacing out projects to allow for other work-related activities).
Tool Kit 3: Materials from the Library’s Collection:

- 30 copies (or more depending on the number of participants) of high-interest, low-reading level books for participants and children to display as well as check out. Include wordless picture books for pre-readers or those with little or no confidence in reading skills.
- 40+ Pens or pencils so the participants to fill out surveys and to take notes if they want. (exact quantity will depend on the number of participants you have)
- Paper for participants to write notes (quantity will depend on the number of participants)
- Examples of library resources and information such as hours and services brochures, reading/learning kits, and library card applications, branch calendars, etc. Pitfall: Try not to overwhelm participants with a lot of materials, especially if this is their first time in a library setting!
- 2+ children’s CD’s (more or less depending on the length of your program) to play while the participants and children are coming in and while they are eating. Music breaks the ice and sets a positive energy for the group.
- Toys for infants and preschoolers. If possible, use a baby ‘toy chest’ full of toys and activities to use for dads with infants. Put toys in the center of the room for children to occupy themselves. Pitfall: Put toys away when you begin the talking points of your program. It can cause a distraction to you and other participants.
Library Space:

- Use a room with plenty of space. Arrange eight tables in a U-shape. (see diagram below) Place 2-3 chairs at each table so that the fathers have room to stretch and tend to their children, if necessary. In the center, place toys so the children have some ‘free play’ if they became fidgety or fussy. (Please see pitfall on previous page).

- For the craft portion of the program, take the children to the children’s area. It is helpful to have an area with good lighting, such as track lighting. Slat walls create an eye-catching display of children’s books. It is useful to have a space that is open yet apart from the adult area. Place the tables in a U-shape (see diagram) with 2 children per each table. Put the supplies in the middle so all the children have access. (please see pitfall on previous pages)
Pitfall: Scheduling mix ups can create stress and havoc on your program. Make sure you do not overbook the community rooms in your branch or facility.
6.4

Library Equipment:

- CD Player
- Flip chart with self-adhesive back for presenters
- Markers
- Ellison machine (for making cut outs for books)
6.5: Tool Kit 3:

Supplies Outside the collection:

Consumable Supplies:

- Food for participants, partners, volunteers, and staff, if possible. (request enough food for each participant; for example: I requested enough food for 30-for father and child)
- Plates (get double the amount of your participants since children will tend to use several)
- Napkins (buy two packages 100/each)
- Silverware: forks, spoons, knives (quantity will vary, but get enough so each participant will have 2 of each)
- Cups (follow guidelines for plates)
- Beverages -purchase 2-3 of each type of drink: soda and fruit beverage. (again, this number may vary with your participants)
- Balloons
- Drop cloths or table cloths for children’s area (for craft time)

Reusable Supplies:

- Glue/glue sticks for craft (1 per child preferably)
- Glitter (4 large containers)
- Construction paper -2 packs (number will vary depending on group size)
- 3 boxes of crayons (64 count)
- 3 packs of markers
- 3 pairs of scissors (or more if you have a lot of adult helpers)
- 50-100 Ellison Machine shapes, if possible.
- 2 plastic table cloths for food and drink table

Initially, partners were difficult and challenging to engage. Eventually, several partners were discovered to assist in the program. Side Street Deli is a well-known mid-town eatery; they were gracious enough to donate food for each session as well as display posters and flyers in their establishment. The owner is well known throughout the community for her outreach efforts.

Dad’s Inc. is a well-established institution that believes that the key to putting families together is to have a strong, confident father. After reviewing some of their publications and their website, this partnership seemed to be a perfect fit. They provided advertising for the sessions on their website and provide participants. Unfortunately, despite best efforts, they were unable to provide participants. They did bring two assistants to help with the craft portion for both sessions.

Family Services Center (Head Start) provides assistance to many low-income families within many low-income areas. Their assistance was crucial to this program. They displayed posters and other promotional materials in several of their service centers; they signed up dads for the program; and they also provided volunteers/assistance with the crafts.

Library staff members can be critical in identifying participants. Enlist them to ask patrons who fit the target demographic if they would be interested in the program. The more you involve all members of staff, the more support you will gain from your program.

Dear:

I am writing on behalf of the Brightwood Branch of the Indianapolis-Marion County Public Library. We are pleased to present a brand-new initiative: Man Up: Read Up! This encourages young, black fathers to emotionally connect with their children through the act of reading. We are offering this program in two sessions: April 12, 2007 and May 11, 2007.

In order to make this program a success, your participation is needed! As a community leader, I know you recognize the importance of the family and the status of young black males. Please consider speaking at one of the sessions. The first session begins at 5:00 p.m., and the second one begins at 2:00 p.m. Please call or email me if you have any questions or concerns about this invitation. I look forward to speaking with you!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Brown-Harden, Juvenile Librarian

Measurement Guidelines

After the participants have eaten and are settled, this can be done on a flip chart. Ask the participants for a show of hands and record responses. Have a staff member, if possible, to help with counting. It is helpful to have these questions already written on the board so they can see what you’re going to ask of them.

Pre-Test Questions: Concepts

4. What three things do you want from this program?
5. Do you think reading is an important tool for your child?
6. What do you think of the library and its services?

Practices:

4. Do you have a current reading ritual with your child?
5. What are your reading habits?
6. Do you currently use the library or its services?

States of Being:

4. How do you feel about books and reading?
5. Do you feel confident reading aloud to your child?
6. Do you feel comfortable using the library?
7.4.1: Measurement Tools

This measurement is done the same way as the pre-test. Make sure you do this at the end of both sessions in case someone doesn’t come back from the first one. If you’re only doing one session, do it after the first session. Have a staff member help count and record the responses, then compare with answers from the pre-test.

7. Do you feel more comfortable or less comfortable using the library?
8. Do you feel more confident selecting books for your child?
7.4.2 Measurement Tools

This is important to keep so you can gauge the success or failure of your program. Have one volunteer pass out surveys at the beginning of the last session (if there are two) and have someone else to stand by the door and collect. You may be able to identify more participants from the responses. Compare this to your pre and post tests.

7.4.3 Measurement Tools

This rubric can be used if you have the dads reading aloud. If you have reluctant readers, it may not be a good idea to do this. If you have fathers who are willing, this can be done at both sessions to gauge reading progress, if any, between the two sessions. This can also be used for some of the older children in the group who are willing to read aloud.

PROMOTION TO AUDIENCES
This is a guide for the librarian and the project partner who jointly take responsibility for attracting a capacity audience for the program. It is important that all participants are a good match for the program's information literacy and content objectives.

5.1: Took Kit # 5

Sample Advertisements:

(Posters and flyers were used)

You may have to change the format of this poster and flyer to attract the demographic audience you’re looking for. Change the wordiness of the text to use a couple of sentences to attract attention such as: “Need something to do with your kids for an afternoon?” “We can help”! or “Dads, step up to the plate” (baseball season).

Your Library, Family Development Services, and Dad’s Inc. are pleased to present:

5.2: Marketing

Grabbers in content/Layout

As mentioned previously, it helps to have a provocative 'hook' for the program. Some of these may be helpful in promoting your program:

- Bring it: your story, that is!
- Come with a story, leave with a story
- You CAN judge this book by its cover!
- Capture your own personal story...
There are several opportunities in this program for participants to learn valuable information literacy skills. Depending upon your audience and demographic, you may have a variety of readers and reading levels. For example, you may have an adult who can barely read at a first grade level and you may have a 5 year old who reads at a 6th grade level. As mentioned previously, have a variety of books including high-interest, low-level, wordless picture books, board books, and highly sophisticated picture books.

- The reading aloud demonstration by the content expert or Librarian demonstrates information literacy. They are modeling behaviors that dads can take home with them. For example, reading can be a game. Try flipping the book upside down to see if the child catches it. You are demonstrating reading skills such as print awareness, and print recognition by encouraging the child to read along with you.

- In addition to being a knowledge product, the book the children and adults make also teaches information literacy skills. They have to know word placement (reading from left to right), and learning words and their meaning to demonstrate their own stories.

- By having the dads and kids read their stories/books aloud, they are demonstrating the information literacy skill of narrative: being able to communicate and tell a story.

- Dads and children learn the skill of appropriate book selection for their reading levels, and they also improve reading comprehension skills.

- Finally, getting fathers to read to and with their children builds ‘Family Literacy’. Fathers need to know their importance in the lives of their children and the impact their absence (emotional and physical) may have on the family.
5.4 Distribution Plans

Having posters, flyers, or bookmarks are great, but useless if they’re not seen. Here are a few examples of places you may want to have your publicity:

- Your Library Branch
- All partners, if any
- Other Libraries close to your location, if possible.
- High Schools, if permitted
- Churches, if permitted
- Community partners in your service area such as community centers, grocery stores, etc.
- In-branch promotion such as calendars, newsletters, displays, and ‘word of mouth’
- Television, if possible
- Radio, if possible
- Daycares
5.5

Start to Finish Marketing Timetable

Three-four months before: write out a script for your posters, flyers, bookmarks, etc. Have a color and design in mind and try to map it out in a word document. If possible, work with your print shop coordinator so that he/she knows what you’re looking for.

Pitfall: Remember to make the wording and design suitable to your target audience. For example: The original name: ‘My Buddy and Me and a Book Makes Three” was inappropriate for young black males. The new title is more appealing to that demographic.

Two months before: Submit your copy to the print department (If you use one); also, make sure you have enough posters, flyers, bookmarks to distribute to everyone you may need. If possible, order more than you think you’ll need so you’ll extras in case you run out at your Library. It’s also good to keep a few copies for your portfolio.

One Month Before: Check on the status of your print job if you’ve not heard back from the print department. If you have, check the copy for misspelled words or incorrect information. If possible, have another Librarian or staff person also check in case you’ve missed something.

Three Weeks Before: If you’re satisfied with the final product, distribute your promotional materials to appropriate outlets.

Helpful Hint: Please keep a copy of your request and ‘script’ in case something happens within another department. There’s nothing worse than having to recreate something you thought was already finished!
