Using everyday objects to achieve extraordinary results

Providing Interesting, Creative, and Innovative Treatment Sessions with Minimal Resources

Many rehab facilities are cutting back funds and budgets and therapists are left with very minimal supplies to meet the needs of their patients. It becomes tedious and boring for both the therapist and the patient to complete the same activities over and over. Many therapists need a recharge or a boost in creative treatment ideas to help motivate patients to achieve their full rehab potential. However, these innovative ideas must fit into the ever-decreasing treatment tool budget.

This educational offering teaches therapists how to look at common objects in a new and creative way for use in their work setting. A virtual tour is taken through hardware and home improvement stores to identify tools that are inexpensive and valuable when making modifications for patients. A “cookbook” of creative treatment plans is provided with items that cost less than $5, many of which are found in most homes or workplaces.

Ms. Smith graduated from Indiana University in 1996. Her specialty is providing creative, quality care while working in low-income demographic areas. Out of necessity, she has developed many creative ways to look at common resources.
