Civil Society and the Economy: Greek Civil Society during the Economic Crisis | 公民社會與經濟：經濟危機下的希臘公民社會

Author: Marilena Simiti. Pages: 357-373. Published online: 24 Jul 2017.

Abstract: Academic literature has extensively analysed the impact of political and cultural factors on civil society. However, the influence of economic change on the infrastructure and features of civil society has remained relatively understudied. This article analyses the impact of the economic crisis on Greek civil society and links the findings to the broader academic debate on civil society. On the basis of the Greek case, the article argues that: (1) the density of civil society may be a misleading indicator of its strength if abstracted from the broader economic context and (2) the economy is not merely an external force, enabling or hindering the development of associational activity. It also shapes the nature and patterns of civic engagement and participation.

摘要：目前的文獻已有大量對於影響公民社會的政治和文化因素的分析。然而，關於經濟變遷對於公民社會的基礎條件和特性的影响的研究則相對較少。本文分析了經濟危機對於希臘公民社會的影響，並且將我們的發現與學界關於公民社會的辯論聯繫起來。在希臘這一案例的基礎上，本文指出：（1）如果從經濟大背景中抽離出來，將公民社會的密度作為其強度的指標具有誤導性；（2）經濟不僅是推動或阻礙社團活動發展的外因，它也塑造了公民參與的性質與模式。

Preferred method: send the paper to Colin Barker as an email attachment in MS Word or .pdf format. Any separate illustrations etc. should be sent separately, in .jpg format.

Workshop on Transnational Networks amid Global Crisis and Change | 全球危機與變遷中的跨國網絡研討會

Deadline for submissions: 15 February 2018 | 提交截止日期: 2018 年 2 月 15 日

University of Pittsburgh, United States: September, 2018 | 美國, 匹茲堡大學: 2018 年 9 月

Call for Proposals:

Proposals are sought for research papers to be presented at a workshop at the University of Pittsburgh in the fall of 2018. We invite researchers -- particularly junior scholars, scholars from under-represented groups, and scholars from countries of the global South -- to propose research papers that employ data we have collected in the Transnational Social Movement Organizations and Inter-Organizational Network Databases. These data are centered on transnational social movement organizations (TSMOs), a subset of international organizations with explicit aims to promote social or political change, but also consider how these groups are connected to international governmental organizations (IGOs) and other international nongovernmental organizations (INGOs).

Please send abstracts of paper proposals to tsmoworkshop@riseup.net.

Themes: Revitalization and Representation | 主題: 復興與代表

Revitalization

New mobilities, new textual modes, and new technologies have pervaded Asian regions, affecting communication, structuring the lifeworlds (lived environments), and re-authoring altering identities. As such, language has seen mediation to develop new yet evolving forms. While these changes have become significant, reflexive efforts to cultural origins have also become central to global flows. These efforts have been labeled revivalist, both in widespread languages, and in minority languages. Furthermore, central to work on these languages, are frameworks of Anthropology, without which, our understandings of the political, cultural and linguistic elements would scarcely present themselves epistemically.

Representation

The effects of Colonialism in and of Asia, crossing into a current era of Post Colonialism, and finding junctures with the intensified global flows of the now, encourage the production of ideas and ideologies of representation of self and other, as well as ideologies of social and cultural performativities. This leads to pursuits of representation. Pervasive throughout the twentieth century, was Western dominance, a hegemony now countered by post structuralist notions of global identity, thus decentering the West, and 'recentering' the East. Language and identity thus emerge as constructs central to the understandings of these recenterings, and understood not least through a Linguistic Anthropology. Here, Asian languages and identities have become an increasingly concentrated nexus for new forms of globalization.
