

Future of City Services

As cities deal with an aging workforce, deteriorating state aid, and the continuous fiscal challenges in attracting, recruiting and maintaining new employees, city governments are taking inventory of what city services could pose challenges for them to provide with uninterrupted service in the coming years. With the impending implementation of further fiscal restraints in 2017 via a tax lid, cities again had to take inventory of their future and basic services they currently provide.

In a July 2016 League survey<sup>1</sup>, cities responded that in the near future they could face challenges with the following city services:
