The Early Days:
A History and Chronology

By Danette Cook Adamson
THE EARLY DAYS

It was in October 1941, during the final peaceful days preceding America's entry into war, that the California Chapter of the Music Library Association had its birth. Despite the violence taking place in Europe and Asia at the time, most Americans were feeling safe and remote from the hostilities. In California, business was booming as government contracts poured into the state. Soda shop jukeboxes were blaring out the swinging tunes of Glenn Miller, and teenage girls were swooning over a slender young singer named Frank Sinatra.

In California and throughout the United States the profession of music librarianship had blossomed during the early decades of the twentieth century as an increasing number of libraries expanded their music collections. In 1931, during a meeting of the American Library Association in New Haven, Connecticut, a group of librarians and musicologists interested in the special problems of music libraries formed the Music Library Association. Members sought to organize cooperative efforts among music libraries across the country and to foster musical research.

The San Francisco Chapter

Jessica M. Fredricks and Carleton Sprague Smith were largely responsible for establishing MLA's first chapter in California — the San Francisco Chapter, founded in 1938. Fredricks was the energetic head of the San Francisco Public Library Music Department from 1917-1950; Smith, then president of MLA, was on the west coast during the summer giving lectures at Stanford University. Fredricks scheduled a meeting with Smith and other interested persons, on August 16, 1938 in the Music Department of the San Francisco Public Library, specifically to discuss forming a western unit of MLA. A majority of the thirteen persons present felt it would be practical to have two MLA chapters in California. They decided to form a "Northern California Section of the Music Library Association" with the hope that their southern California colleagues would establish their own chapter. Miss Fredericks later confessed "...It was not our idea (Dr. Smith and I) to have two branches, but that is what the others thought. I'm a little sorry. But there will be much cooperative work in any event." Nathan van Patten (Stanford University Libraries) was made president and Fredricks was appointed secretary, but the well-intentioned northern California group met only once before lapsing into dormancy.

The California Chapter

A second attempt to establish a chapter was made in 1941 by Gladys E. Caldwell, administrator of the Art and Music Department at Los Angeles Public Library from 1922-1948. Caldwell was serving at the time on MLA's Committee on Regional Organization and had responsibility for organizing chapters in the West. After surveying various MLA members living in the western states, she concluded it would be feasible to have a chapter in the Pacific Northwest and at least one in California. Organizational planning for California was problematic due to geographical distances and the location of the small number of MLA members in the state. There were six members in the San Francisco area and four members in the Los Angeles area -- not enough, it was feared, to sustain two separate chapters capable of offering stimulating meetings. After consulting with Nathan van Patten, Jessica Fredricks and John Windle, chair of MLA's Committee on Regional Organization, Caldwell decided to organize a single California chapter which would affiliate with the California Library Association to the extent of holding its first meeting with CLA that fall.

On October 18, 1941, surrounded by the rugged beauty of the Monterey coast, fifteen Californians interested in music libraries gathered for a luncheon meeting at the stately Del Monte hotel. The meeting was opened by Jessica Fredericks who recommended an official dissolution of the San Francisco chapter in favor of re-forming as the California chapter. The motion passed and two officers were elected: Gladys Caldwell, president and Joyce Atlee Gross (Beverly Hills Public Library), secretary. Despite its state name, the California chapter initially intended also to serve MLA members in adjacent states.9

Two papers were presented at the meeting. Cornel Lengyel, editor of the W.P.A. Writers Project in San Francisco, spoke on early California music, and Edythe Backus reported on the music resources of the Huntington Library. Before adjourning, members planned a program of activities for the new chapter which included four major features:

1) The recording of music books and manuscripts in California missions;
2) A committee to compile a union list of important music reference material in larger libraries of the Los Angeles area;10
3) Exchange of information regarding important new accessions in California libraries;
4) A newsletter to be published quarterly, edited by Jessica Fredericks.

Shortly after the Del Monte meeting, it was discovered that extensive research on mission music had just been published by Father Owen Francis da Silva in his Mission Music of California.\(^{11}\) The new chapter, therefore, chose to focus its efforts on the union list project. The development of musicology as a discipline and the increase in musical activity in southern California had created a demand from students and scholars for music reference resources. Unfortunately, individual west coast libraries at the time could rarely provide the range of material needed to support serious musicological study, and their growth had been handicapped since 1940 by war conditions which made it impossible to obtain material from Europe.\(^{12}\) In an effort to increase the visibility and usefulness of existing resources available locally, the union list committee\(^{13}\) attempted to gather information from all libraries known to have music reference material in the region south of and including Santa Barbara. When returning the information on music holdings at the University of California Los Angeles, Walter Rubsam wrote, "I believe that the present undertaking is of extreme importance, not only for Southern California, but for the entire nation, for it will be the first attempt of its kind and will be a model for other sections of the Music Library Association."\(^{14}\) The first draft of the list represented holdings in seventeen libraries. The project was pursued continuously during the war years but it did not achieve its final form until 1953 when it was published as Reference Works in Music and Music Literature in Five Libraries of Los Angeles County, edited by Helen Azhdarian.

Chapter archives only reveal activity by members in the Los Angeles area from 1942–45; there is no indication that the planned quarterly newsletter was ever issued. Gladys Caldwell continued as the chapter's wartime president and several meetings were held in her Hollywood home. In 1942 Caldwell drafted a resolution, first introduced to the chapter and later backed by MLA, that all music libraries and departments of music throughout the country dedicate each October 30th, the date of the birthday of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, "to the celebration of chamber music and to her part in promoting its enjoyment."\(^{15}\) Caldwell suggested using bulletin boards, book displays, lists, live concerts and record programs to mark the occasion. Throughout this period progress reports on the union list were given at most chapter meetings and the list was the focus of all meeting activity during 1943. The war was never far from member's thoughts and the 1944 meeting with CLA considered such war-related topics as "Democracy and Music," Lawrence Morton posing the question "Do politics matter to the musician and the artist?" and the "Armed Forces Master Records," explained by William Hartsorn as a project whereby every army group departing from Los Angeles was given a library of classical records and a phonograph. Chapter archives show no meetings in 1945, but during that year Gladys Caldwell recruited future Southern California Chapter chair George Schneider (MGM Music Library) and as a member of the editorial board for Notes, she actively solicited articles from west coast writers for MLA's quarterly journal.

In 1946, after five long years filled with the tensions of war, chapter members from the entire state met together for the first time since the founding meeting in 1941. The picturesque island-like setting of Coronado, off the coast of San Diego, was the site of the program, held October 18, 1946 in conjunction with CLA. Reports were given on the use of records in three different types of southern California libraries, with Joan Meggett reporting on University of Southern California Library, Mary Pearson on Long Beach Public Library, and Olive Sprong on Los Angeles Public Library. The paper "Music in Films" was presented by Constance Purdy. Purdy was the developer of Film Music Notes, said to be the only publication on film music at the time. The Coronado meeting marked the official establishment of separate northern and southern chapters in California. The new officers elected were: chairman Jessica Fredricks and secretary Mary Kathleen Moore (National Broadcasting Corporation Music Library) for the Northern California Chapter; chairman George Schneider and secretary Grace Winters (University of California at Los Angeles Library) for the Southern California Chapter. Thus, the organizational structure for California fluctuated once again, but in this instance the decision stood the test of time as music libraries and MLA membership grew in each region, supporting the long-term stability and growth of two distinct MLA chapters in California.
