

Facilitator Certificate Resilience & Thriving

Individuals who earn a Facilitator Certificate through NWI will be able to use the tools, resources, and techniques provided in the certificate course to train students, employees, and clients in various settings in the topic presented.

Facilitated online course now available!

The National Wellness Institute (NWI), in collaboration with Organizational Wellness Learning Systems (OWLS), is offering a new 5-credit course with evidence-informed tools and competency-based training in the areas of stress and resilience. The course also aligns with the NWI Wellness Promotion Competency Model.

Course participants will learn a new system that integrates NWI's Six Dimensions of Wellness model with the concepts of stress, resilience, and thriving. The slide deck, facilitator notes, handouts, book, and other tools provided in the training can be used in their own workshops, training, and coaching activities.

To earn a Certificate as a Resilience & Thriving Facilitator, and be able to offer the "Resilience & Thriving: The Secret Power of Stress" training to others, participants must successfully complete all elements of the online certificate course and pass an online exam.

Course Objectives

Certificate course participants—as well as the individuals they train—will be able to:

- distinguish between how stress, resilience, and thriving operates in their lives
- identify the effects of stress and signs of not coping well
- identify personal coping style and strengths for transforming stress into a positive factor
- identify how stress is a risk factor for both personal health (negative well-being, unhealthy habits) and workplace outcomes (absenteeism, accidents, mistakes)
- recognize healthy alternatives to working with stress
- describe 5 specific steps to thrive from stress

Each training includes a preview video, 2 facilitated online sessions, and an online exam. See NationalWellness.org/Resilience for the most up-to-date schedule.
