

The NWRA is worthy of your financial support

NWRA is unique. We are part of a larger environmental and conservation movement, but we are unique in that we focus specifically on wildlife rehabilitation and related veterinary medicine and educational programming.

This focus enables us to apply our resources where we can be most effective—providing education and building skills in individuals that affect others. Teaching results in the ripple effect as each individual who learns from NWRA affects many others, both human and wildlife. Wildlife rehabilitators, veterinarians, and educators teach classes and produce and disseminate high-quality information for colleagues and peers. We take pride in being an organization where volunteers and staff work together to make a difference.
