Often a nurse sees a problem in the work place but doesn’t know what steps to take to resolve the issue. Sometimes these issues are because our contract is not being adhered to. As part of our contract, we have a process called the grievance procedure (Article 12, page 32 of our contract). The grievance procedure first encourages a nurse to work with their manager to solve the problem. If a nurse is not able to resolve the problem to their satisfaction, then we start the formal grievance process. This is a process that helps evaluate the problem as well as possible solutions. An important part of the process is following the timelines. The contract states very clearly that timelines need to be followed. One of the most important timelines is, a nurse must file the grievance within 14 days of the known problem or violation.

During the grievance procedure, sometimes it may not be attainable so all parts work together to develop reasonable timelines. Working with our local bargaining unit executive team or our Oregon Nurses Association (ONA) labor relations representative, Julie Serrano is the easiest way to make sure timelines are met. Reach out to the team. They can help guide the nurse through determining if something is a grievance, and also how to go about reaching a resolution. The grievance procedure is one of the ways nursing can work through some of the issues as a team.

Why Take Time to Fill Out a SRDF?

Have you ever been frustrated when you have brought a problem to management and they have stated “We didn’t know”? The staffing request and documentation form (SRDF) is the tool that has been created to make sure all individuals involved in making the staffing decisions have the correct data. As nurses we are obligated by our license to report such staffing concerns. By not making management aware of the situation, it could be held against us as the nurse who is caring for a patient if an incident occurs. Nurses have been reported to the Oregon State Board of Nursing (OSBN) for many situations that directly resulted from poor staffing conditions. If a patient is harmed or does not receive the care they feel they should’ve received, due to staffing, we need to speak up. The data collected by the SRDFs can be used by staffing committees and management to support staffing decisions and requests. It can also help facilitate a conversation when challenges seem to be up and coming in a unit or department. We need to protect our nursing licenses. SRDFs can actually help the nurse defend their license.

This is why the SRDF has the very straightforward following statement:

“I indicate my acceptance of the assignment under protest. It is not my intention to refuse to accept the assignment and thus raise questions of meeting my obligations to the patient nor am I refusing to obey an order if such were given. However, I hereby give notice to my employer of the above facts and indicate that for the reasons listed, full responsibility for the consequences of this assignment must rest with the employer. Copies of this form may be provided to any and all appropriate state and federal agencies.”

This statement:
- Puts the facility on notice of inadequate staffing.
- Protects the nurse’s license.
- Collects useful data to track trends and long term staffing concerns.
- Creates a paper trail.
- Returns ownership of staffing inadequacies to the facility while allowing the nurse to care for the patient.

Please take time to help us create safer staffing. Your input as a bedside provider is valuable. At no time can the person, or persons, filling out these forms be disciplined or retaliated against for providing this valuable information.

If you have questions or concerns regarding SRDFs, please contact our ONA executive team or Julie Serrano, your ONA labor relations representative.
