A Lasting Learning Legacy:
Helping Students Develop Growth Mindsets for Education and Beyond

Presented by Jennifer Hunter
PA Forward Information Literacy Summit | July 21, 2016

Use these prompts during the presentation:

1) Think about something that you have learned that you have developed mastery of.

2) Think about something that you try to learn but can’t get the hang of.

3) Create a scenario—real or imagined—for which you might interact with a student where they are encountering a challenge. Describe your scenario.

4) What feedback might you provide this student that would encourage a fixed mindset?

5) What feedback might you provide this student that would encourage a growth mindset?
References for Learning More about Growth Mindset

Kamenetz, A. (2015, May 28). Nonacademic skills are the key to success. But what should we call them? NPR.org. http://www.npr.org/sections/ed/2015/05/28/404684712/non-academic-skills-are-key-to-success-but-what-should-we-call-them
