Ryan Bojrab

VP, Transparency & Clinical Risk Management

Ryan Bojrab serves the NFP national cost containment team as the Vice President of Transparency & Clinical Risk Management, bringing with him over twelve years of combined experience in healthcare administration, clinical musculoskeletal pathology, disease prevention, well-being programming, healthcare analytics, consulting, benefits, and product management & strategy. He channels those skills to fulfill his passion for building evidence-based healthcare solutions rooted in data and analytics that help advisors and organizations meet their strategic goals by exploring creative options for communications and cost containment. In his role, Ryan is responsible for practice vision & strategy, positioning, training, ecosystem partnerships, and evangelism.

Ryan is a graduate of the University of Indianapolis with a doctorate degree in physical therapy. He began his clinical career as a physical therapist at Eskenazi Heath, one the largest essential hospitals in the country, where he specialized in manual therapy, orthopedics, occupational health, and biopsychosocial approaches to improve self-care and well-being. In 2014, he transitioned to a clinical administrative role in well-being and lifestyle medicine with a focus on a holistic approach to well-being for employees, patients and the community. Ryan is skilled in population health strategy, employee engagement, care integration, implementation, data analytics customization & reporting. During this time, Eskenazi Health was named to Becker's 150 Great Places to Work in Healthcare 4 years straight, won the Wellness Council of Indiana 5-star AchieveWell award, achieved national recognition for the well-being program by being named as an affiliate organization through the CDC's office of Total Worker Health, earned the Hulman Health Achievement Award: Public Health is Good Business, and became the first health system in Indianapolis to receive full recognition by the CDC for Diabetes Prevention Programming.

Ryan transitioned to FirstPerson Advisors, one of Indiana's top benefits, compensation, and organizational health consulting firms. He served as the Senior Director of Health Strategy focusing on building and leading cost containment and clinical risk management strategies leveraging health analytics, custom clinical reporting, and a vetted vendor ecosystem of partners. After two years, Ryan moved over to Artemis Health, one of the leading healthcare data analytics platforms, leading product management and strategy while serving on the leadership team. During his tenure, Artemis Health achieved 27% revenue growth and 8x growth to the product and user experience team while signing impressive logos and launching 2 new products – all in a year and a half.

Ryan is a Lean Six Sigma Blackbelt, certified in lifestyle medicine through the American College of Lifestyle Medicine and an avid sports fan. He is actively involved in the community serving as a center advisory board member at the Athenaeum YMCA, emerging wellness professional task force through the National Wellness Institute, and advisory board member through the Wellness Council of Indiana. In his free time, he enjoys exercising, traveling, reading, tasting different bourbons, and connecting with people. When he's not out and about, you can find him spending quality time with his family, friends and wife, Kristin, and son, Jonah.
