Link blocks junk catalogs

December 25, 2011

Brookline and Cambridge residents looking to stem the tide of mail-order catalogs can now do so with a few mouse clicks, thanks to a collaboration between the two municipalities and the Boston-based Product Stewardship Institute. Since August, residents have been able to opt out of getting paper phone books and magazines. To do the same for catalogs, visit brookline.catalogchoice.org; residents of other communities can use www.catalogchoice.org. - Andreae Downs
