Dear Friends,

Welcome to our 2015 NSHMBA Conference & Career Expo!

This is a particularly special conference for two reasons. First, this year’s event marks the beginning of a massive transition in our organization. After extensive examination, NSHMBA’s leadership is leaping to an exciting new chapter of our story to empower Hispanics to reach their full educational, economic and social potential. Second, we are truly coming full circle. Chicago was the location of NHSMBA’s first conference and like that first conference in 1990, we have the whole world before us. Our leadership is fresh, energetic, and excited to continue finding innovative new ways to assist all Hispanic professionals in reaching their full potential.

We are excited to celebrate such a pivotal time at this year’s conference, let’s take a moment to look to the future. As we acknowledge the monumental achievements of our predecessors and remember all the lessons we’ve learned over the last 27 years, we look forward to climbing to new heights. In my role as Interim CEO, I’ve seen us grow into an even stronger organization that reflects the demands of a mobile, modern Hispanic community. I have no doubts that the next 25 years will build on the last!

Chicago will be our most exciting conference to date. I look forward to meeting all of you, and I can’t wait to see the next generation of Hispanic talent taking advantage of all the opportunities this great organization has to offer. On behalf of our national staff and leadership team, I sincerely hope each of you have a fantastic time during your stay in Chicago!

Thomas Savino
NSHMBA Interim CEO
Understanding and appreciating each others’ diversity

At Bank of America, our employees are our foundation. They are the reason we’re able to make connections around the globe. It is also through these connections that we’re able to champion an environment of diversity and inclusion; one that celebrates our teammates, customers, clients and communities for everything that makes them unique.

Life’s better when we’re connected®
Dear Friends,

Think of your career as a business plan. You’ve written the executive summary, planned out the details, and now is the time to take action. This year’s conference is your opportunity to kick-off or kick-start the plan. It’s time to invest in yourself by networking with fellow members and corporate sponsors as you market yourself to them. And, with every event you attend and every hand you shake, ask yourself how your plan is advancing. You are among the brightest; a generation of unparalleled potential and opportunity. Therefore, we encourage you to take advantage of this year’s event in Chicago and run with it. We’ll be with you every step of the way.

I can’t convey how excited I am to be a part of this organization. Chicago will be the most important conference in NSHMBA’s history. We are at a crossroad. Our community is evolving in ways we never would have imagined, and we have to make a choice. We can continue to operate at the status quo or grow and become better; an organization that empowers Hispanic business professionals to achieve their full educational, economic, and social potential more effectively. We choose to grow.

NSHMBA is reaching new horizons as we transform into a more flexible, modern, robust organization. We’re changing because the market is changing; but we continue to excel with some of the most talented men and women in the United States. NSHMBA will continue to help Hispanics reach their full potential by challenging the different paradigms we face. Make no mistake; we can’t do this without you. To our members and key stakeholders, I say thank you. Our newest chapter in our history is just beginning. What heights can we help you reach?

NSHMBA Knows wants to be your resource for the latest tips and professional advice to help you navigate your career. For this special conference issue, NSHMBA Knows has enlisted the expertise of Austin Chapter President Xavier Cano to share some advice and tips on resume writing.

Having an effective resume is important when searching for new opportunities. Although the resume alone will not get you the job, it is an important piece of paper that will facilitate your process in acquiring an interview. It is imperative to understand how to create a resume that will stand out, as recruiters will typically spend a few seconds scanning the hundreds of resumes they receive for each available position. Below are a few tips he gets asked when working with clients.

Q Should I include my LinkedIn URL on my resume?
A. Yes, more and more recruiters are using LinkedIn to learn about prospective job candidates. Include your LinkedIn URL on your resume in the heading below the e-mail address. However, prior to doing this, you should make sure that your LinkedIn profile is complete, your LinkedIn URL has been customized, and your photograph looks professional.

Q How can I make my Work Experience section stand out?
A. Quantifying or using numbers to describe your work-related results give recruiters a better idea of the magnitude of your accomplishments. You do not need to quantify the contents of every bullet, but do so if possible. For example, you can say that you increased customer satisfaction from 86% to 94% through an initiative you led, rather than just saying you increased customer delight.

Q How much from my experience should I include in each role on my resume?
A. It is not necessary to list everything you have done in a past position but rather include those experiences and skills gained that match those in the job posting. For example, if one of the job requirements indicates that strong leadership is required, then list one or two items from your experience demonstrating how you have mastered this skill.

Q Should I include community service events on my resume?
A. Yes, while not required, many companies like to hire individuals that help out in the community. If you have space available on your resume, include community service events where you participated.

Q How can I make my resume look professional?
A. Headers, such as “Work Experience” or “Education” stand out in the resume when making them bold and/or underlined and give the resume a cleaner and professional look. This will also make it easier for recruiters to review your resume quickly. In addition, your resume should have a balance between black words and white space. I recommend 60% of the resume to have black words and 40% to have white space.

For more resources, go to NektPro.com or check out Xavier’s book, “Resumes That Stand Out!” to get more tips on how to create a superior resume. If you have questions that need answering or if you’d like to provide your expertise in other NSHMBA Knows article, please email marketing@nshmba.org.

Evelyn Sanguinetti lives a life of firsts. She is a first generation US citizen. Her first language is Spanish, and she is the first Latina to hold the title of Lieutenant Governor not just in the state of Illinois, but also in the United States. She’s the embodiment of underdog success, and a leader who seems handcrafted to defy the status quo for Latinas nationwide.
The Musician

Evelyn is a small woman with dark brown hair and intelligent, focused eyes. Her fingernails are painted the same bright color as something she’s wearing, usually a suit. She’s attentive and poised, serious but happy. She smiles when she’s finished talking. Evelyn possesses the decorum of a Politician, but the kindness of a mom. Her confidence tells her audience that it’s not an act. She’s not trying to be a leader. She is a leader, and with every calculated comment she makes, it is strikingly obvious that she’s earned her place. Evelyn Sanguinetti is the seamless fusion of a mother, a volunteer, a lawyer, and a politician.

Her story is unique, but holds many of the elements woven into the American dream. From a child living in a struggling family, to a classically trained concert pianist, to one of Chicago’s top lawyers, hers is a tale of redemption and success; a story where education and hard work can make dreams come true. Evelyn is the embodiment of the American woman and American leadership. Starting from humble roots, she’s evolved into one of Chicago’s rising politicians. In addition to raising three children, she helps manage the state of Illinois, practices private law, and serves as an Adjunct Professor of Law at the John Marshall Law School. She is a leader in her home, a leader in her state, and a pristine example for women and the Hispanic community. No one starts at the top, and Evelyn is certainly no different.

Her rise didn’t begin in Illinois, and it certainly didn’t begin with politics. To look into her formative years, we have to go to the southernmost economic hub in the United States, Miami, Florida. A home base for a huge portion of immigrants from the south, Miami served as the backdrop for Evelyn’s traditional upbringing. Her parents fell in love early, and she was born when they were only fifteen. The teen sweethearts came from very different places. Her mother arrived from Cuba as a refugee in the seventies following the Castro transition. Her father’s family traveled from much further west, Ecuador. Like most immigrant families, Evelyn’s parents sought the American dream for themselves and their family.

Unfortunately, US economic struggles at the time proved hard on everyone, and things were arguably worse for immigrants struggling to find decent paying work. “I remember always being one step ahead of the landlord… I remember that my parents did whatever it took to put food on the table. I remember the fear,” Evelyn stated in an interview. Her family survived on public aid and odd jobs. Sanguinetti vividly remembers her mother sewing and cleaning houses to bring extra income to the household. Evelyn was too young to work, but she knew she had to do something. She poured that determination into hard work at school. It wasn’t until Evelyn started playing piano that she found a doorway to opportunity. Upon taking lessons it quickly became apparent that she had a gift, a gift that would grant everything her parents wanted for her. With piano, Evelyn gained access to Florida’s premier fine arts public high school, and eventually received a scholarship to Florida International University, where she earned a bachelor’s degree in music.

Evelyn didn’t only see opportunity in education when she started playing. Playing the piano also paved the way for her long history of volunteering. At a young age, Evelyn spent her time traveling to retirement homes and playing for residents. She was paid in smiles, but gained something that would prove critical to her future success. “Volunteerism and civic engagement is what creates our future leaders,” Evelyn said of her work, noting that while education was essential to her success, volunteerism is a phenomenal tool for young people to build their resumes. “You don’t need a degree, all you need is a ser-vant's heart.” Her secret to energetic volunteerism is following her passion. For Evelyn it was piano. For others it could be something entirely different. Evelyn’s only guidelines are we decide what we love and spend our time doing that.

The Lawyer

The song didn’t stop for Evelyn when she earned her undergraduate degree. In many ways, the music degree was just the beginning of a very different adventure. She loved the performance aspect of her musical endeavors, but saw the opportunities education gave her, and chose a new path. Evelyn entered graduate school in Illinois and earned her law degree from John Marshall Law School. She spent the next decade working for both the government and in private practice, until she experienced an event that would change her life forever. In 2007, while walking in West Chicago, Evelyn slipped on a patch of ice and broke her back. The result proved to be a blessing in disguise. Her injuries required life threatening surgery and a spinal fusion that would guarantee limited mobility for the rest of her life. While in the hospital, she was also diagnosed with multiple sclerosis.

The Community Leader

The thing is, natural born leaders don’t know how to quit. People like Evelyn simply don’t feel sorry for themselves for very long, they don’t know how. Resigning her future to fate was not an option. She distinctly remembers her husband advising her to do the opposite. Evelyn felt the need to do more to improve the lives of her fellow Chicagans. She knew what a difficult life looked like, and knew she could help. With a law background, specifically in the public sector, Evelyn ran for city council in Wheaton, Illinois, a suburb in west Chicago. She won the election.

As it turns out, Evelyn loves politics. From negotiating with unions to settling disputes between neighbors, improving the lives of every day citizens has become a passion. As a leader, Evelyn holds a distinct advantage over her competitors. Rising from a life of poverty directly connects her to the state’s every day citizens. There is a special place in her heart for the challenges her voters face. She understands firsthand the challenges immigrants face in the United States, and more importantly, how critical education is for ensuring success amongst America’s youth. In many ways, her meteoric rise from poverty has become her platform. As a city council woman, she focused on sidewalk safety for her community. Maybe she knew there were bigger issues in store, but the principles remained the same.

The passion for people, the drive, the focus, the intelligence, made her a standout during her stint as a city councilwoman, and Chicago’s politicians took notice. As a moderate Hispanic, Evelyn was chosen as a running mate for Bruce Rauner’s State Governor bid in 2015. Running on a purely economic platform, the campaign was a smashing success, granting Evelyn the title of Lieutenant Governor, a title no Latina has ever held in Illinois, or the United States. Alongside State Secretary Nellie Gorbea from Rhode Island and Governor Susana Martinez in New Mexico, Evelyn represents a new wave of Latina leadership in politics. Her politics are based on the challenges she overcame and the challenges she sees in her community. As a major player in Illinois government, Evelyn’s laser focus lies on assisting young people just like herself. She wants educational opportunities for everyone.

So we arrive to the present. Her focus is still on her community. Every Thursday night she works with her church to assist and council individuals recently released from prison. Evelyn volunteers on the Franklin Middle School, Lowell Elementary and Jefferson Preschool Parent Teacher Associations, remaining involved with her kids’ schools. After school volunteering includes her son’s Cub Scout troop, the Community School of the Arts, and Wheaton Briarcliffe Youth Baseball. She assists local business at the Wheaton Chamber of Commerce and puts her legal experience to use on the Dupage County Bar Association. Evelyn Sanguinetti has achieved success by any unit of measure, and it doesn’t look like she’s going to stop any time soon. More importantly, she is a woman to look up to. Altruism and hard work have proven to be her secret recipe. She has defied the odds of success not only as a first generation American, but as a woman in politics. She is proof that anyone can achieve nearly anything if they put their mind to it. Evelyn has been a fighter from the start. She’s worked her way from the bottom and overcome every obstacle life has presented her. Evelyn’s education in the arts opened unimaginable doors for her, and is proof that any Hispanic who feels the need to put his or her dreams into action can achieve anything.

Every year, NSHMBAs chapters across the United States compete to be named the Chapter of the Year. While a bit of friendly competition is always good fun, the criteria for winning is very real, and enables NSHMBAs to measure their strengths and weaknesses as an organization. This year one chapter stood out above the rest. NSHMBAs is proud to announce New Jersey as Chapter of the Year.

Chapters are graded in 3 categories; financial health, programming, and mentorship. Additionally, a chapter must fall into NSHMBAs compliance rules to participate. Any chapter who does not meet compliance regulations for two consecutive quarters becomes ineligible to win Chapter of the Year. In 8 years, New Jersey has received the award 3 times. Given NSHMBAs list of 40 excellent chapters, this is a phenomenal achievement.

During the rating period, former Chapter President Janet Simms said, “The tremendous effort led by the New Jersey Chapter Officers through partnerships with our corporate sponsors, members, and supporters enabled the chapter to reach its full potential.” As a new year approaches, Chapter President duties are being passed to Ramon de la Cruz, who is confident New Jersey will continue to set the standard for excellence.

New Jersey’s chapter hosts 8 to 10 events annually. “Through our chapter’s collective programs, I believe that we are making a positive impact among business students, young MBAs and business professionals,” stated Ramon de la Cruz, New Jersey Chapter President.

New Jersey scored consistently well in all categories, enabling over 850 members in the Garden State to better themselves through NSHMBA.

What is a NSHMBHA Leader?

A Leader With Vision

Traits of NSHMBHA’s Luminaries

Professional leadership runs through NSHMBHA’s veins. Since 1988, NSHMBHA has acted as the premier example of Hispanic leadership in the United States. The men and women who work tirelessly for the Hispanic organization changed many times over the years, but a consistent thread of values have defined their vision of success since the beginning. Everything has an origin, and the National Society of Hispanic MBAs is no different. Like any community, it takes a certain set of principles to succeed. It takes special people, special skills, and an ability to adapt to changing times. It also takes leaders. From its inception, NSHMBHA has been an organization founded on the principles of leadership, with a rich history of individuals possessing special, rare talents. As the organization has grown, so has the character of the men and women who have ensured its success for over 25 years.
Leaders who set the example

In order to understand NSHMBA’s vision of leadership, it’s helpful to go back in time to the beginning. Here one can find the seeds of character that eventually grew into the fruit displayed today. What NSHMBA needed from its leaders over a quarter of a century ago, was crucial to laying the foundation. However, a set of core values has remained the same for NSHMBA’s lifespan. For the first 7 years, NSHMBA’s efforts went towards the establishment of the organization. It needed to define its leadership, its mission, and its place in the nonprofit world.

NSHMBA prides itself in a rich history of charismatic leaders, starting with Henry Hernandez, a former Fortune 500 company executive and intelligence officer for the CIA. Founded in 1988 by Hernandez, Maggie Pena, Richard Rey, and Chris Arrangaga, the group defined what the leadership model would look like from the beginning. They were energetic, visionary, enthusiastic, and disciplined. This group of MBAs had the vision of creating a grassroots support organization aimed at bettering Latino professionals in the United States. They sought to see more Latino leaders in the corporate sector, government, even non-profits. The program they created aimed to assist the Latino community as a whole, regardless of national origin. NSHMBA, from its humble origins in a living room, launched nine months later with a $3000 seed fund. The founders started by creating a board of peers to act as self-governing leadership. Living in different areas, the board didn’t actually meet in person for the first 7 months. The team relied on weekly faxes, conference calls and standard mail, the ability to communicate clearly became a paramount leadership quality and has stuck as an important trait possessed by every leader who has excelled within the organization.

In November of 1988, NSHMBA was inducted into their local town hall. By December, they were incorporated into the state of California as a 501c3 non-profit. In January of 1989, they would simultaneously launch their first chapters in six major cities with concentrated Latino populations. These cities included Los Angeles, San Francisco, Houston, Miami, New York, and Chicago. By 1990, the founders held the first NSHMBA conference in Chicago, where they had 300 attendees and 65 exhibitors.

NSHMBA’s rich history of leaders provide the organization with strengths that are exemplified in their members and future leaders. These past leaders set an example of an entrepreneurial spirit that still breathes life into young professionals. They were risk takers, pace setters and stand outs in their professions. With a vision and dream for future Hispanic professionals, these leaders volunteered their time, talent and ideas to establish NSHMBA. They were team players with a “can do” attitude that penetrates every aspect of the organization you see today.

Formalizing Leadership

The following period was a time of stewardship for NSHMBA. As an established non-profit, leaders during this time brought a different set of skills to the table. As finances, logistics and chapter relationships were formalized, a series of detail oriented, management-minded leaders took charge. A growing NSHMBA was short staffed and underfunded, requiring decision makers to exhibit unparalleled resourcefulness in order to accomplish set goals.

In 1995, NSHMBA established their first national office. It was a time of change for everyone at NSHMBA. For the first time in their history, a paid staff would coordinate nationally. This also meant a shift in leadership structure. With the 5 paid staff members in the national office and 13 chapters spread throughout the United States, new leadership would require vision, resourcefulness, and unparalleled strategic thinking.

Until this time, NSHMBA’s 13 independent chapters worked... autonomy. Each chapter had its own website and even used its own bank.

While the banking and chapter branding issues could be easily addressed, national leadership noticed something in the process. If NSHMBA were to grow, it would be absolutely necessary to continually invest in chapter infrastructure. The national office tackled the big issues first. In addition to switching all chapters to a single financial institution and website platform, NSHMBA embraced modern technology and upgraded their membership tracker from an excel spreadsheet to a full-fledged software program where individuals could enroll.

As the leadership team worked to unify chapters, they began evaluating strategies to grow the organization’s membership. On the marketing side, funds were nonexistent. Executing conferences and other campaigns to grow membership fell on the shoulders of the national staff and even the chapters themselves. Despite the massive changes and shortage of resources, the NSHMBA community organized itself and grew. NSHMBA’s national office formalized their relationship with the chapters producing NSHMBA’s first nationally cohesive image. Now NSHMBA, built on a legacy of communication, proved they could communicate, not just with each other, but with the public they were trying to reach.

Visionary Leadership

NSHMBA was looking for a very specific skill set to continue the progress they’d made over the last decade when the most recent CEO took the helm in 2010. They formalized relations with their chapters and brought on a full-time national staff, but they needed funding and that meant working closely with for-profit businesses to generate donations and sponsor relationships. NSHMBA needed a leader with for-profit executive experience who had a heart for charity. This translated to a communicator with a strategic mind. The new leadership style paid off, and NSHMBA grew five fold in less than a decade. NSHMBA was stronger than ever, but a rapidly shifting market meant it was time for a new strategy and a new type of leader.

NSHMBA’s next CEO. NSHMBA’s leadership over the years displayed an astonishing level of diverse talent, but all of them hold one special leadership trait; vision. The same leadership trait that NSHMBA has seen throughout the years will be just as relevant today in a rapidly changing market.

A future leader must continue to communicate both internally and externally. In an era with so many communication tools at its disposal, it remains critical that these individuals exhibit intrapersonal communication skills as they embrace technology to accomplish tasks faster and more efficiently. NSHMBA is continuing to develop relationships with new partners, including universities, and effectively utilizing the NSHMBA board as well as constituents. The NSHMBA staff continue to work diligently to move towards the new strategy alongside 40 strong and growing chapters.

This leader must leverage technology with an analytical mind and rapidly translate data into action. He or she must be a doer as well a thinker. After two rounds of strategic planning sessions, the board intends to focus on increasing professional experience at their own level, falling into the hands of whoever is chosen as NSHMBA’s new CEO. This new CEO must execute all board strategies within the organization and throughout the various established partnerships. It’s always been a demanding job. One must be a servant first and always set the example. The individual that takes the helm for NSHMBA’s future endeavors, must exercise flexibility in a market that changes every year.

NSHMBA’s vision of leadership remains the same, but the tools required to promote all Hispanic professionals are constantly changing. Whatever the challenge, NSHMBA’s new era of leaders need not worry. They will be at the head of an organization built on a vision of success and will have the ability to tap into decades of exceptional leadership with a myriad of rare talent and knowledge.

¡Bienvenidos! and welcome to Chicago -- a sentiment that I express sincerely on behalf of Northeastern Illinois University for your commitment to Hispanic business professionals and their talents. As the number of Hispanic business leaders grows, your participation becomes all the more critical -- fostering cultural understanding, pursuing professional development and taking pride in your heritage.

Speaking of pride, we are incredibly proud of our city - Chicago’s great traditions, food, architecture, and people. We are also proud of our University. Northeastern Illinois University -- with its 10,000 students -- is recognized as the most diverse public university in the Midwest. As a federally designated Hispanic-Serving Institution (HSI), Northeastern is also the first to establish an undergraduate chapter of NSHMBA. So, it makes sense that we greet you now as the academic co-lead of this conference.

I hope you enjoy the conference and this great city, and that you take advantage of everything they have to offer you while you’re here.

Sincerely,

Sharon Hahs
President

Critical to making the decision to go to business school is trusting that a better, higher paying job will be waiting for you on the other side. Those receiving MBA and specialized business master’s degrees this year are largely seeing that their trust was not misplaced—the 2015 hiring market for business school grads looks very strong across all degree types. Here are five key takeaways from the Graduate Management Admissions Council’s 2015 Corporate Recruiters Survey:

1. Hiring demand for MBA and specialized business master’s graduates is up around the world. Globally, 84 percent of employers plan to hire MBA graduates this year, compared with 74 percent that hired them in 2014. Of those with plans to hire, 59 percent plan to hire more MBAs than they did last year. The percentage of companies hiring MBAs is up in every world region—notably, 92 percent of US companies plan to hire MBAs in 2015 compared with 80 percent that did so last year.

The share of employers planning to hire specialized business master’s grads this year is also up compared with 2014 actual hiring. Specifically, more than half (51%) plan to hire Master in Management grads (vs. 41% that hired them in 2014), 46 percent plan to hire Master of Finance grads (vs. 32% in 2014), and 44 percent plan to hire Master of Accounting grads (vs. 31% in 2014).

2. The median starting salary for MBA grads in 2015 will nearly double that of bachelor’s grads at US-based companies. US-based companies are expected to offer recent MBA graduates a median starting salary of $100,000, compared with a median of $55,000 for bachelor’s grads. Globally, more than half of employers will increase starting salaries for recent MBA hires this year; 1 in 5 will do so above the rate of inflation.

3. Internships are a highly effective way to land a job offer. MBA and specialized business master’s students do remarkably well turning internships into full-time employment. An incredible 85 percent of companies with MBA interns extended full-time job offers to them in 2014. Eighty-three percent of companies with non-MBA master-level business interns did the same. Globally, 67 percent of companies had MBA interns and 56 percent had non-MBA master-level business interns last year.

4. Demand for new hires skilled in data analytics is high and growing rapidly. Globally, 51 percent of companies plan to hire for data analytics job functions in 2015—up from 44 percent last year. Data analytics is in high demand across industries, with the majority of employers in the energy and utilities (67%), technology (64%), nonprofit/government (59%) consulting (57%), and products and services (52%) sectors planning to fill data analytics positions this year.

5. The majority of companies worldwide categorize their direction as “expanding/growing”. Companies in the US (74%), Asia-Pacific (62%), Europe (59%), and Latin America (53%) predominantly define their direction as expanding/ growing. Globally, just 16 percent said they are “overcoming challenges”. Companies that classify themselves as growing are the most likely to be seeking recent b-school grads to hire.

The class of 2015 is seeing the benefits of a graduate management degree—will you be next?

Since its creation in 1988, NSHMBA has and will always be focused on Hispanics earning MBAs. But after 27 years, that singular mission simply doesn’t encompass the variety of students the organization assists on a daily basis. As a result, NSHMBA has redefined its mission to include all Hispanic business professionals. Each of NSHMBA’s major stakeholders and NSHMBA’s Board of Directors determined a reinvention is in order to reflect this new mission... NSHMBA will become something even better this year with an intention to rebrand and 4 new initiatives.

University Chapters
NSHMBA is building upon the infrastructure and support provided to its existing 40 professional chapters to begin opening University Chapters on undergraduate campuses across the United States. With an initial focus in key markets, NSHMBA is piloting university chapters already in the Chicago area, and has launched its first at Northeastern Illinois University. To get started, University Chapters only require a minimum of 10 student members, a faculty advisor and the commitment of four members to serve as chapter leadership. The goal is to give younger students equal access to the development, networking, mentorship and job placement opportunities that NSHMBA provides its membership. The organization is excited to build the foundation for Hispanic students to move onto professional careers or graduate programs and to send a message to Hispanic students all the way to the high school level by showing them that support and development programs exist throughout their educational journey.

Mentorship
Under the new strategy NSHMBA begins the formalization of a mentorship program to pair experienced professionals with students, graduates and early professionals to advance their knowledge and skills for the professional environment. There are fewer things more valuable to a young leader than good advice. Through the use of technology tools and resources, this program will provide both the mentor and mentee opportunities to grow personally and through the relationship which will begin through a skill- and experience-based pairing. Utilizing technology, geography no longer has to be a limitation, and in this program allows for NSHMBA to bring added value to its members who are looking for new ways to engage and give back through the organizations network and community. NSHMBA chapters and members also don’t have to be the only individuals to pair; we look forward to providing this opportunity to our corporate and university partners who are looking for additional growth opportunities to offer their students and professionals.
Internships
Internships, as a companion to NSHMBA’s mentorship strategy, will continue to play a vital role as the community grows in the coming years. As NSHMBA expands to undergraduate students, we realize the importance of these types of experience for students and the benefits for companies and organizations as well. For members and corporate partners, networking opportunities will take place on the NSHMBA job board where students can search and apply for internships, and companies can search for potential employees. Our strong partnerships with some of the nation’s largest corporations gives students the experience they need in today’s competitive work force. Not only will students gain professional knowledge during their internships, they will receive a “foot” in the door, allowing them to network with peers in their field as well as potential job opportunities.

Fundraising & Development
For over 28 years, the NSHMBA Foundation has worked to bring programs and scholarships to members of NSHMBA. Through our annual conference and career expo, NSHMBA Academy, and the many local events offered through our chapters, we continue to strive to bring quality opportunities to each and every one of our members. The Foundation seeks to ensure Hispanic Americans have access to quality education programming that prepares them for their future.

Donations to the Foundation help support all of the NSHMBA Foundation’s scholarship opportunities including GMAT test preparation courses, academic awards through University Partners, and conference scholarships. Donations also help support the educational programs at conference and through all the local chapters. From professional developments, to Ignite, to mentorships and internships, the NSHMBA Foundation is striving to meet the educational needs of our members.

NSHMBA will continue to operate on a multi-tier platform essential for the realization of Hispanic success in the workplace and a keen focus on education, economics, and social mobility as the foundation for new development goals, programs, and resource allocation for the organization.

Empower Hispanic Business Professionals to achieve their full educational, economic and social potential.

Be the leading catalyst for Hispanic achievement by 2025.

Without Hispanics, America’s Corporations Can’t Grow and Compete

The cultural demographic shift in the United States is about the workplace and marketplace telling us it’s becoming less about the business defining the individual and more about the individual defining the business. This is exactly what Hispanics are awakening corporations to, as they begin to recognize that young professionals entering the workforce are in search of the right career and employer who will allow them to be their most authentic selves. This equally holds true to those Hispanic professionals who have been battling the gulf between assimilation and authenticity for years – and are now ready to advance as 21st century leaders by allowing the influence of their cultural values to empower the natural ways they think, act and are motivated to perform at work.

Every 30 seconds, two non-Hispanics hit retirement age and one Hispanic turns 18 years old. According to the Selig Center for Economic Growth at the Terry School of Business at the University of Georgia, Hispanics will represent 74% of labor force growth by 2020. However, according to the Center for Hispanic Leadership, Hispanic professionals are only delivering 40% of their full potential at work. With the growing purchasing power of Hispanic consumers that is estimated to reach $1.7T by 2019 (according to the Selig Center), there is urgency to employ and advance more Hispanics into influential leadership roles – where they can help most authentically guide brands to create the most effective strategies to not only attract and develop top Hispanic talent, but capture the growing Hispanic marketplace.

Isn’t it safe to assume that if Hispanics could deliver more of their full potential, their purchasing power would also increase? So what are we waiting for? Perhaps the implications would be better understood if we realized that the combined purchasing power of U.S. Hispanics represents the 16th largest economy in the world.

The rapid growth of the U.S. Hispanic population that is at the forefront of the cultural demographic shift is requiring corporations and their leaders, across all industries, to think differently about how they can most effectively engage with Hispanic employees and consumers to drive new areas of growth. As such, there is a growing need for senior executives and all levels of leadership to be more culturally competent in an effort to awaken the full potential of the Hispanic workforce and to engage more strategically with Hispanic consumers by building deeper, more meaningful and trustworthy relationships.

Opportunity Gaps Across All Industries

Healthcare, STEM educators, financial and insurance service providers, automotive, telecommunications, real estate, media & entertainment, retail and consumer brands – all must not only be actively involved in this transformational conversation, but must properly invest to solve for the growing “opportunity gaps” they have unknowingly perpetuated. This is why Hispanics have not historically felt fully engaged in their work – and why consumers have grown tired of being sold by brands who have failed in their approach and intention to relate with and serve their unique needs influenced by their cultural values. This has become clearly evident in the manner in which most corporations have not committed to invest in long-term growth strategies to solve for the widening opportunity gaps, instead focused more on short-term compliance tactics to protect their reputations. As such, Hispanics have grown frustrated, oftentimes feeling undervalued and uncertain about their loyalty and confused about why they should commit their workplace performance and purchasing power to corporations and brands that have yet to fully commit to them in their business models. Perhaps this explains why it has become so difficult for companies to attract and retain top Hispanic talent and why Hispanic marketing efforts often deliver underwhelming results.

The bottom line is that you can’t maximize the full potential of a culturally-driven market segment that is quickly becoming the new mainstream when you still believe that they will assimilate and accept a more general market approach or total market strategy that makes half-hearted efforts to include Hispanics. These attempts by brands are simply fueling the identity crisis that Hispanics are eager to escape. Perhaps it’s time to accept that assimilation to traditional White-Anglo Protestant values has now given way to America’s new value system that is being redefined by the cultural demographic shift™. Preparing U.S. leadership for this shift requires that corporations and their brands enable the advancement of Hispanics in the workplace and marketplace. By becoming more culturally proficient, together they can authentically lead, innovate, and embrace new competitive advantages to drive growth and innovation. The key is for corporations to stop ignoring that Hispanics are creating new types of demand across every industry – and begin to gain clarity and understanding of what the shift means, before it’s too late.

This means beginning to solve for:

- Widening Opportunity Gaps: convert performance gaps into incremental revenue and new areas of sustainable growth.
- Urgent Need to Operationalize the Shift: defining strategies and solutions in support of new business models to create marketplace distinction.
- Stimulate Maximum Engagement: define the full potential of employees, brands and external partnerships to multiply outcomes and strengthen intellectual capital requirements by leading the shift.

This effort will make America’s corporations better equipped and prepared to grow and compete in the industries they serve – while equally contributing towards stimulating economic growth and global competitiveness by most effectively developing an American-bred talent pool that will create new markets, multiply current purchasing power projections and further define America’s future.

Making a Business Case for the Hispanic Opportunity

A special report by The Economist validates this argument while digging deep into the roots of just how much dependency the immediate and long-term future of America is directly linked to a Hispanic population that will represent 30% of the United States by 2050. The report, authored by David Rennie, The Economist’s Washington Bureau Chief, took three month to research and five weeks to write. It is an excellent depiction of the role and responsibility America’s politicians and business leaders must assume to elevate the human capital potential of U.S. Hispanics if economic growth and global competitiveness is to abound. Equally, leaders must not only begin to pay closer attention to the data and analytics, but must learn to translate what the numbers and trends really mean to change behavior and attitudes to drive sustainable results – based on the understanding that cultural values influence Hispanics to engage in unique and different ways.

Rather than build bridges to advance the Hispanic population – to make them a stronger force and hold them more accountable, so that Hispanics can contribute to American society for the betterment of their families and the nation at large – politicians and business leaders are creating barriers to advancement that is weakening this juggernaut of a population. Consequently, this is making it more difficult for America’s corporations and the U.S. economy to grow and prosper.

In my recent conversation with David Rennie, I asked him: “Are politicians making it difficult for Hispanics to advance in America?” He answered, “Yes. It is true of both the right and the left.” Perhaps it’s time to change the conversation and include the voices of emerging and influential Hispanic leaders (and non-Hispanic leaders) that can objectively provide clarity and understanding of the real issues at hand. Without these voices, the narrative will never change.

As you read The Economist report, it becomes quite clear that this is not a one-sided story with a one-sided solution. It sends an unwritten message to U.S. Hispanics that they must equally become more accountable to discover and unleash their full potential – whether there are bridges or barriers to advancement. Hispanics must realize that they can’t wait for anyone but themselves to solve their own challenges (i.e., education, jobs, etc.).

In other words, Hispanics must begin to lead and start to collectively lift each other up – rather than pull each other down, which only creates more barriers to our advancement. Our diverse community must lead together to actively integrate into the fabric of American society if we are to earn the trust of corporate and government leaders. At the same time, corporate and government leaders must awaken to the realization that the longer they ignore or wait to engage with and invest in Hispanics, the more they are putting their businesses and the economy at risk.

When discussing this issue with Mr. Rennie, he eloquently and enthusiastically stated, “Hispanics represent the backbone of the working class and they will soon need to be a key part of America’s middle class. Hispanics must become America’s future physicians, lawyers, professors. We must start taking action to replace the white middle-class population that is becoming older with a Hispanic population that is making America much younger.”

Changing the Conversation (It’s No Longer About Immigration)

The report states that 1 in 4 public school children are Hispanic and that 5 out of 6 U.S. Hispanics are legal citizens. In other words, the immigration conversation has become outdated. Given the current state of America’s economy and global competitiveness, which continues to lose ground, it’s time for business and government leaders to create a legitimate platform that will allow Hispanics to play a more integrated role in the reinvention of America. As Mr. Rennie stated, “Politicians are right that a demographic revolution is under way. But their panic about immigration and the national interest is misguided. America needs its Latinos. To prosper, it must not exclude them, but help them realize their potential.”

This is a challenge that most corporations across all industries are being faced with: how to build the talent pipeline and develop the next generation of corporate leaders, physicians, highly skilled labor, etc. that not only represents the new marketplace, but will influence how the marketplace is served in order to create new areas for growth and innovation. In particular, the healthcare and biomedical fields are experiencing a desperate need to close the Hispanic talent gap, as it puts more patients at risk and causes higher costs of care for medical institutions.

For example, only 5% of physicians in the United States are Hispanic, yet more Hispanics are insured than ever before (as a result of the Affordable Care Act). This creates a healthcare delivery gap that can make it difficult to educate Hispanic patients about preventive care and overall management of their lifestyles. This is cause for concern when you consider that Hispanics are becoming more susceptible to chronic diseases, such as diabetes, obesity and cancer, and face barriers to access to genetic testing, research, new treatments and cures.

According to Stephanie Neuvirth, Chief Human Resources and Diversity Officer at City of Hope, a leading Cancer Institute located 25 miles east of Los Angeles in Duarte, CA (with a patient service area that is 46% Hispanic), “As advances in medicine evolve at an unprecedented pace, this is a critical time to invest in preparing the next generation of health care and biomedical professionals, in particular with the Hispanic population. There is a vital need to build a pipeline of Hispanic healthcare and biomedical workers to meet the unique needs of the rapidly growing patient population. To make sustainable change, we must engage parents, teachers, employers, community influencers and all other stakeholders in the STEM conversation to achieve real solutions – not just talk about them. At City of Hope, we are looking strategically at how we can quickly solve for workforce pipeline issues by initiating conversations on how we invest in, develop and introduce our youth to possible careers in healthcare, beginning as early as 2nd grade and we are inviting our school district and local colleges to join us in this conversation to collaborate in programs such as the T.E.A.C.H. Project to maximize our efforts. Current diverse healthcare and biomedical workers are being asked to sponsor interns, be role models and mentors.”

These same types of challenges that impact an organization’s and an industry’s ability to grow and compete also exist in the insurance and financial services sectors. For example, many Hispanics hold misconceptions about insurance that intensifies their natural skepticism. Nearly half (49%) don’t know what type of policy to buy or how much coverage they might need, and even if they did, a full 75% believe insurance is too expensive.

As such, the Hispanic community suffers disproportionately because of lagging insurance coverage, which contributes to their health disparities and mounting medical bills. Even so, learning about insurance can cause high levels of anxiety in the Hispanic community, especially among those without coverage, who delay buying insurance because of perceived costs, the need for more knowledge about insurance coverage options, or simple procrastination. On top of this, insurance is not mandatory or necessarily needed in most Latin American countries, so its important role in U.S. society is not widely understood across the Hispanic population.

According to Nielsen, 15 million Upscale Hispanics (nearly 26%), earning between $55K and $90K a year, are investing more in Retirement/Pension Funds (43%), Children’s College Funds (24%) and Life Insurance/Annuities (23%). Nielsen estimates that by 2050, there will be 35 million Upscale Hispanics. The question remains: Will the insurance and financial sectors be prepared to serve them?

According to Juli McNeely, LUTCF, CFP, CLU, President of the National Association of Insurance and Financial Advisors (NAIFA): “Our sponsored Advisor 2020 report details how the rapid population growth in immigrant communities, especially Hispanics, is transforming the U.S. into a minority-majority country. Now, more than ever, NAIFA must help its members and the insurance and financial services industries that we serve enhance their skills, knowledge and networks to tap into and serve these growing markets, in particular the Hispanic market. Our goal is to prepare our members for 2020 and beyond.”

The American Dream Lives Within the Hispanic Community

As more Hispanics pursue the American dream, the demand for homeownership is on the rise. Between now and 2020, Hispanics will account for 50% of new buyers. According to the 2013 State of Hispanic Homeownership report, the total number of owner households in the U.S. grew from 69.2 million in 2000 to 74.7 million in 2013, an increase of 5.5 million. During that same period of time, Hispanics accounted for an increase of 2.6 million owner households, or nearly half (47%) of all homeownership growth in the country.

Patty Arvielo, President and Co-Founder of New American Funding, an FHA Direct Endorsement (DE) and Government-Approved national mortgage banker, says that, “Though Hispanics are expected to account for 50% of new homebuyers in the coming years, according to the National Association of Hispanic Real Estate Professionals, the industry is not anywhere near prepared for this demand. Companies looking to increase their Hispanic market share need to have relevant products and a diverse workforce and possess knowledge of the cultural and language nuances that are common among Hispanic homebuyers. For example, Hispanic millennials – who New American Funding has branded as #hispennials! – are an enormous growth opportunity for our industry, but you won’t reach them the same way you do other homebuyers, because they want to communicate via social media and other online mediums.” As corporate leaders wrap their arms around these issues, they must not succumb to an “us versus them” mentality, a scenario that only produces a zero sum game. This is about the integration of a new America, about the melting pot giving way to a cultural mosaic, and being open-minded enough to seize the opportunities that diversity in thought can bring to the reinvention of a nation. The rapidly growing Hispanic population is about natural evolution and as leaders we must see through a fresh lens that not only embraces areas of like-mindedness but recognizes how unique differences in people can propel new ways of thinking to drive growth and enable competitive advantages.

Otherwise, what happens to a country when 30% of its population is performing at only 40% of its full potential? I believe we all know the answer as we begin to understand the urgency for leadership to prepare itself for the cultural demographic shift™. As Mr. Rennie boldly stated during our conversation, “This is not reversible. Hispanics are not going away. The demographic revolution is alive and vibrant.”

Even so, critical questions remain: When are corporations going to awaken to the full potential of the Hispanic opportunity, before it’s too late? How can they begin to embrace this New Normal to grow and compete? Who will emerge as the bold and courageous leaders to change the narrative that has held back growth, innovation and new opportunities? This is all about change management and those who commit to change rightly by viewing the cultural demographic shift™ as a platform for growth will not only win the war for Hispanic talent, but will earn the right to dominate the marketplace as they take the lead to strengthen America’s economy and global competitiveness.

“Get involved as soon as possible.” United Latino Student President, Marhia Martinez, couldn’t have summarized NSHMBA’s new strategy any better. This mindset exemplifies why NSHMBA recently introduced undergrad chapters to the membership family as part of their new vision. The primary challenge of introducing chapters in universities is finding the students to lead them to success. As NSHMBA receives inquiries from new universities on how to start their own chapters, they’ve established partnerships with organizations such as United Latino Students (ULS) located throughout California. Groups like ULS are leading the charge during this growth period, mobilizing their members and truly empowering Hispanic students to reach their full potential.

Regional organizations like those at ULS are critical for ensuring university chapter success. In addition to groups, individual student leaders are teaming up with faculty to get started. Take NSHMBA’s first undergraduate chapter as an example. Started by 10 undergrads, NSHMBA’s newest chapter resembled the founding of NSHMBA itself, a few bright young people with a heart for Hispanic professional development.

Northeastern Illinois University (NEIU) was the perfect place to launch this exciting new part of NSHMBA’s story. Located in Chicago, the college is regarded as “the most comprehensive public university in the Midwest,” and is designated by the US Department of Education as a Hispanic Institution. In fact, NEIU has an enrollment of over 10,000 students, more than 50% of which represent Hispanic, African American, Asian, and Native American minorities.

Undergraduate student members gain an enormous advantage over their peers. In addition to receiving academic assistance from other members, they will receive the full support of the NSHMBA community. They will gain access to scholarships, internships, access to GRE and GMAT practice and testing. Joining a chapter allows students to look beyond their undergrad education and begin to search for educational and networking opportunities to start a career. Additionally, student members receive access to a pool of business professionals and companies.

With partners like ULS and the success NSHMBA experienced at Northeastern Illinois University, other schools are showing genuine interest in starting their own chapters for the 2016-2017 academic year. Chapter president for NEIU Alicia Mendoza said, “Just do it. NSHMBA is one of the best opportunities you will come across when it comes to extracurricular and professional development opportunities... NSHMBA staff is amazing at answering your questions; they will help you and walk you through all the things you will need to start a chapter.” ULS students are currently in the planning stages to establish a chapter in southern California, and two additional schools are currently scheduled to establish their own undergraduate chapters; The University of Tennessee at Knoxville and the University of Baltimore.

Any student who joins an undergraduate chapter will receive the same benefits as a NSHMBA professional membership. For students interested in founding a chapter at their university, information and other tools to get started can be found at www.nshmba.org/University

Thank you NEIU and ULS for your contribution to this story.
Hispanic Students Are Out-Performing Their Peers

In recent years, particularly the last 10, Hispanic performance in education has skyrocketed! Hispanics are the fastest growing demographic in the United States and will represent a huge portion of the American workforce in the next 20 years. Future Hispanic leaders must be educated, and with more corporations looking for graduate degrees, it is critical that students complete college.

Since beginning over 27 years ago, NSHMBA has taken pride in its partnerships with schools and corporations. Today is no different. Through these joint partnerships, the betterment of Hispanics in the NSHMBA community and the United States is certain. Working together they ensure students have the development tools they need and are equipped to become hired. Two sides exist to the NSHMBA partnership coin. There are corporations who represent jobs, and universities representing students and potential employees.

Sam Warnock is a representative of the corporate partners and is the Chair of the NSHMBA Corporate Advisory Board (CAB). He is a human resource manager at Ford Motor Company. Through NSHMBA, he recruits some of the nation’s top prospects into professional careers with the company. “Ford Motor Company is committed to recruiting the best and most innovative talent. NSHMBA has for many years supplied top talent that has contributed to our overall success,” stated Warnock.

Warnock and other corporate partners are excited about the addition of undergraduate chapters. “By expanding the program to include undergraduates, NSHMBA is helping students connect with companies, like the Ford Motor Company, earlier in their careers. The Ford Motor Company currently hires hundreds of undergraduates each year. Now we will have another source to aid in our efforts to recruit top talent,” stated Warnock. “With a bigger pool of talent and more time to develop students through internships, it’s a win-win for students and recruiters.”

From an alternate perspective, Patrick Perrella is the embodiment of NSHMBA’s University Partnership Program. As the Executive Director of Career Services for the Daniels College of Business at the University of Denver, Patrick works with non-profits, students, and corporations to ensure that everyone receives the maximum return on investment when it comes to business-student relationships.

In addition to his role at the Daniels College of Business, Patrick also sits as Vice-Chair for NSHMBA’s CAB placing him as a critical component in communication between students and businesses looking to hire. Also, Patrick’s job at the University of Denver aligns perfectly with his role at NSHMBA. As Vice-Chair, Patrick has access to scholarship opportunities for NSHMBA scholars. He also acts as an academic sponsor at NSHMBA’s yearly national conference in order to provide information for students and assist them in finding the right option for professional development.

Patrick is excited about the addition of University chapters. In terms of University partners, it makes sense. Faculty and staff will head undergraduate chapters, so NSHMBA’s university partners are already in place to take the lead. “Not only is the population of undergraduate students greater than graduate students, more companies look for undergrads when hiring employees,” stated Perrella. It puts NSHMBA, students, and corporate sponsors in a great place to have a conversation about work. “Corporations want a return on investment for their recruiting dollars, and NSHMBA is pushing to get the best possible talent in front of these companies,” According to Mr. Perrella, it is absolutely necessary to engage the younger Hispanic population and get them into grad school. “Students, like companies, are looking for ROI. They are looking to get in front of employers and show what they have to offer. NSHMBA provides these opportunities, and I encourage students to join,” commented Perrella. Convincing young Hispanics to attain a graduate degree is a very small part of what NSHMBA’s university chapters hope to offer undergraduates. Working with younger students is a great opportunity for NSHMBA to utilize mentorship tools.

Finally, Patrick encourages students to attend career prep workshops. NSHMBA membership offers various career workshop opportunities, a distinct advantage over peers without a professional development network. In addition to the corporate networking NSHMBA membership offers students, leadership opportunities are also available in the form of working directly with NSHMBA. From chapter leadership to internships with the national office, professional development takes many forms. “Corporations want a return on investment for their recruiting dollars, and NSHMBA is pushing to get the best possible talent in front of these companies.”

NSHMBA needs both sides of the employee/employer coin to see its vision of a more educated, successful Hispanic community continue. Folks like Sam Warnock and Patrick Perrella are the bridge between those relationships and both can’t wait to see the positive impacts the new university chapters will have on talent recruitment.

Diana I. Román-Negrón  |  Louisville

“NSHMBA has taught me to be a transparent leader. It has made me understand that as a leader I must always represent my organization in my personal and professional life. It has given me many tools, including the ability to do public speaking, which I was very shy at first. As a leader of this organization, I have become confident and assertive, and I have been able to communicate this in many different venues.”

JJ Perez  |  Columbus

“Through NSHMBA I have learned the importance of building a diverse team. The varied backgrounds of our board members have allowed us to learn so much from each other, and develop into a strong chapter. I have also learned that leadership is not easy. From dealing with people dynamics to ensuring we are providing value to our members and sponsors, leadership means focusing on others, not myself.”

Angie Mortemore  |  Phoenix

“Prior to serving as the President of the Phoenix Chapter, I learned that life’s trials and failures shape you as a leader. Failure allowed me to reinvent myself, strengthen my skills and capabilities. This is what helped me take the initiative to run for the President of Phoenix, Arizona NSHMBA Chapter. I currently have the honor of working with the most talented, successful, and natural leaders in industry, as well as exceptional MBA students, who together form NSHMBA. NSHMBA has taught me a lot about how to be an effective and impactful leader.”

Alain Espinosa  |  New York

“Leadership, as a way of focusing and motivating a group or organization to achieve our goals, is a much discussed concept but often difficult to master. My role as President of the NSHMBA NY Chapter provided me with the opportunity to build on the success of my predecessors, leverage the expertise of my board members and sponsors, and numerous learning opportunities. This role has taken me on a journey through various dilemmas apparent within leadership that have helped me become a more effective leader in our contemporary environment and initiatives to drive Latino talent.”

Candelario Cervantez  |  DFW

“Through NSHMBA I have learned how to be a better servant leader and lead by example. We have also created a “familia” type culture in which everyone supports each other to accomplish large scale projects that help our mission. We have passed this culture on to our members, reminding them that we are all part of the larger “NSHMBA familia.” In this way, we can continue to grow mutually beneficial partnerships not only within NSHMBA but within the greater community.”

David Berdugo  |  Atlanta

“I have been involved with NSHMBA over 5 years and held different roles within the organization. During this time, I have had the pleasure of working with some extraordinary individuals eager to succeed and give back to the community. I have learned that true leaders understand that the most valuable resource and the key to success is their team. As a leader you have to be willing to compromise, respect their opinion and be able to define and articulate your vision. To lead you have to know where you are going otherwise you can’t get there.”
TIPS ON PROPER CAREER EXPO INTERVIEW ATTIRE

There is a saying that first impressions are lasting impressions. When you go to a Career Expo or Interview, how you dress is a BIG part of that first impression. Suggestions for proper attire for this year's events are below.

MEN'S CAREER EXPO INTERVIEW ATTIRE

- Long sleeve shirt (white or coordinated with the suit)
- Tie
- Belt
- Dark socks, conservative leather shoes
- Neatly trimmed nails

ALSO...
- Little or no jewelry
- Limit the aftershave

WOMEN'S CAREER EXPO INTERVIEW ATTIRE

- Professional hairstyle (Pulled back if long)
- Coordinated blouse
- Nearly manicured clean nails
- The suit skirt should be long enough so you can sit down comfortably (Remove or lift skirt)
- Conservative shoes (less than 3 inches)

ALSO...
- Minimal jewelry
- Light makeup and perfume

WHAT NOT TO BRING TO THE CAREER EXPO/INTERVIEW

- Coffee or soda
- Tattoos (Cover tattoos with make-up or clothing)
- Gum (This is the number one distraction during interviews)
- Cell phone or any other electronic device

CAREER EXPO/INTERVIEW ATTIRE TIPS

Before you even think about going on an interview or to an expo, make sure you have appropriate interview attire and everything fits correctly.

Prepare your attire the night before or a few days before, so you don't have to spend time getting them ready on the day. Some clothing may need to be hemmed.

If your clothes are dry clean only, take them to the cleaners after the event, so they are ready for next time.

Polsish your shoes.

Bring a breath mint and use it before you enter the building.

Stay tuned for our career fair guide!
