Please join us in welcoming

Jessica Amero, MD
with Virginia Physicians for Women to the Richmond Academy of Medicine

Dr. Amero's passion for women's health began when she was a teenager. She spent several summers in Charleston, South Carolina, working with an OB/GYN who was also a close family friend.

Dr. Amero earned her undergraduate degree in biochemistry from the Georgia Institute of Technology before attending the Medical College of Georgia in Savannah. Her OB/GYN residency training brought her to Richmond, Virginia, a city she has since come to love for its vibrant community and people.

Dr. Amero sees patients at VPFW's Koger Center and Prince George offices. She delivers babies at Johnston-Willis Hospital.

As a women's health advocate, Dr. Amero has lobbied for statewide access to family planning and prenatal care and volunteered with non-profits that provide care, education, and empowerment to underserved women.

A devoted cat mom to Moe and Daisy, Dr. Amero enjoys spending time on the James River, cooking, and playing pickleball when she's not taking care of patients and delivering babies.
