"What do you use..." Survey Results

What is the most commonly used grants management software? What do foundations use for cloud storage and is usage growing? The 2017 "What do you use for" survey results have been released. Learn more >

Poney Carpenter has been busy having one-on-one conversations with many grantmakers about which tools to implement for their foundation. These conversations indicate a lot of interest in www.digitalimpact.io and the Bridge ID and less interest in e-reporting and G4G. Click here to read the quarterly update.

In the last few years several companies have quietly been developing products that enable "citizen developers" to create and deploy sophisticated business applications (mobile and web) without having to write much, if any, code. These applications belong to a new genre called "low code platforms," and they feature visual interfaces for drag/drop application building, database connections, and integration with cloud-based infrastructure like Azure and AWS. Cybersecurity for Nonprofits: A Resource Guide

What are the risks? What should we do? During our her tenure at the Nonprofit Risk Management Center, Jennifer Chandler, Vice President of the National Council of Nonprofits, learned to break risks down and prioritize them so they can be managed. Data breaches, that are both likely to happen and can result in serious harm, can fall in the "high priority" category, so it's prudent for every nonprofit to take steps to assess the risks and protect its data from unauthorized disclosure.
