Victims had single and multiple gunshot wounds to the head, face, chest, body, arms and in one case, a finger.

Many victims reported fractures, sprains, back injuries, chipped teeth, bruises and scratches for which they had to be examined to determine the extent of the injuries.

The bullet wounds or bullet grazing left a significant number of victims with permanent injuries and disabilities that continue to require inpatient and outpatient physical rehabilitation including physical and occupational therapy, speech therapy and various types of medical equipment to enhance physical functioning.

Victims who fell as they ran sustained less serious injuries of a physical nature.

But many expressed severe distress in having to run past or over others who had been killed.

During forums, many people expressed a deep need to revisit and honor the areas where there were dead or severely wounded victims whom they could not help.
