3. A New Balance: Wisconsin's Strategic Assessment System – What School Leaders Need to Know in 2015-16 Madison Ballroom

The shifting landscape of our statewide summative assessments has been front and center for the last year, and more change is expected over the coming year. Meanwhile, schools and districts are working hard to develop and maintain strategic assessment systems that purposefully and powerfully use an effective and efficient repertoire of formative, interim, and summative assessments in order to measure and understand student progress in a meaningful way. This session will focus broadly on what we know about our statewide assessments as we launch into the 2015-16 school year, and various resources and materials from DPI to support a strategic assessment system.

MAJOR SHIFTS IN EDUCATIONAL THINKING

This interactive talk examines ten areas in which educational thinking has done a 180 in recent years. Here are some of the old beliefs that have been overturned by evidence and effective practices: intelligence and talent are fixed at birth; poverty is destiny; principals can't be more than managers; great teachers are born, not made; teacher evaluation is inevitably a weak lever for change; K-12 students are too young to be part of the teacher-evaluation process; tests are test; and test data can be used to evaluate teachers.
