

Lynn Sutton is Co-Founder and CEO of Advantage Building Contractors, Inc., a federal government contractor specializing in design build and general construction. She has over two decades of combined experience in federal government contracting compliance and regulations and all aspects of construction activities. She is Editor of Hattie's Hammer, a tool, resource, and guide to help disadvantaged groups navigate the federal market by providing information regarding current events, programs, opportunities and legislation.

Lynn's greatest achievement are her two sons that know there's nothing they can't do. Ms. Sutton has a rich history of entrepreneurship in her bloodline. Raised in Philadelphia her family shares the values of an intense work ethic that stems from fire in the belly. Lynn started her own business at the age of nine. Throughout the years she has developed many successful ventures that span over a wide area of industries.

In 2011, Lynn led her company to award of the first federal construction contract set aside for Woman Owned Small Businesses. Since then, Lynn has been recognized for her leadership in both the construction industry and women's business community. In July 2014, she provided testimony to the US Senate on behalf of Women impacting public policy (WIPP) in support of the Women's Small Business Parity Act and Sole Source Authority. Lynn and her company were recognized as American Express OPEN's On the Rise Contractor of the Year in 2014. Lynn currently serves on the Board of Directors for Women Impacting Public Policy (WIPP).

Lynn has had the keen ability to focus and navigate through obstacles that were critical throughout the organization's transition from a residential roofing contractor to become a successful federal government general construction firm. She is also the qualifier for all State licensing and holds CQM and Osha 40 hour certifications. Lynn enjoys reading, swimming, biking, and yoga. She is a Reiki Master and practices various healing modalities.
